No. 17-1091

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

TYSON TIMBS AND A 2012 LAND ROVER LR2,

Petitioners,

v.

STATE OF INDIANA,

Respondent.

On Writ of Certiorari to the Indiana Supreme Court

BRIEF AMICUS CURIAE OF CONSTITUTIONAL ACCOUNTABILITY CENTER IN SUPPORT OF PETITIONERS

ELIZABETH B. WYDRA
BRIANNE J. GOROD*
DAVID H. GANS
BRIAN R. FRAZELLE
CONSTITUTIONAL
ACCOUNTABILITY CENTER
1200 18th Street NW, Suite 501
Washington, D.C. 20036
(202) 296-6889
brianne@theusconstitution.org

September 11, 2018

* Counsel of Record

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
TABLE OF AUTHORITIES	ii
INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE	1
SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT	1
ARGUMENT	5
I. The Fourteenth Amendment Was a Response to Rampant Infringement of Fundamental Liberties by the States, Including Deprivations of Property Rights and the Oppressive Use of Fines	5
II. The Fourteenth Amendment Transformed the Nation's Federal System To Prevent States from Violating the Freedoms Set Forth in the Bill of Rights	14
III. The Fourteenth Amendment's Text and History Require Applying the Excessive Fines Clause to the States	20
CONCLUSION	24

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Page(s)

Cases

Adamson v. California,
332 U.S. 46 (1947) 15

Browning-Ferris Indus. of Vt., Inc. v. Kelco Disposal, Inc., 492 U.S. 257 (1989) 22, 23

District of Columbia v. Heller,
554 U.S. 570 (2008) 4, 23

Duncan v. Louisiana,
391 U.S. 145 (1968) 22

McDonald v. City of Chicago,
561 U.S. 742 (2010) .... passim

Robinson v. California,
370 U.S. 660 (1962) 23

Schilb v. Kuebel,
404 U.S. 357 (1971) 23

The Slaughter-House Cases,
83 U.S. 36 (1872) 24

Washington v. Glucksberg,
521 U.S. 702 (1997) 23

Constitutional Provisions and Legislative Materials

Act of Apr. 9, 1866, 14 Stat. 27 .... 12, 14

Act of July 16, 1866, 14 Stat. 173 13

An Act to Amend the Vagrant Laws of the State (Mississippi Nov. 24, 1865) 10, 11

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES – cont'd

Page(s)

Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. (1865) 6, 7, 10

Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. (1866) .... passim

2 Cong. Rec. (1874) 19, 20

U.S. Const. amend. XIV 16

Books, Articles, and Other Authorities

Akhil Reed Amar, America's Constitution: A Biography (2005) 21

Akhil Reed Amar, The Bill of Rights: Creation and Reconstruction (1998) 3, 17

David P. Currie, The Reconstruction Congress, 75 U. Chi. L. Rev. 383 (2008) 5

Michael Kent Curtis, No State Shall Abridge: The Fourteenth Amendment and the Bill of Rights (1986) 19

Garrett Epps, The Antebellum Political Background of the Fourteenth Amendment, 67 Law & Contemp. Probs. 175 (2004) 11

Eric Foner, Reconstruction: America's Unfinished Revolution, 1863–1877 (1988) 6, 7, 8, 18

Letter from Maj. Gen. O.O. Howard to Sec'y of War E.M. Stanton (Dec. 21, 1866) 11

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES – cont'd

Page(s)

Robert J. Kaczorowski, Revolutionary Constitutionalism in the Era of the Civil War and Reconstruction, 61 N.Y.U. L. Rev. 863 (1986) 17

Kurt T. Lash, The Origins of the Privileges or Immunities Clause, Part III: Andrew Johnson and the Constitutional Referendum of 1866, 101 Geo. L.J. 1275 (2013) 18, 19

Report from Brevet Brigadier Gen. J.R. Lewis to Maj. Gen. O.O. Howard (Nov. 1, 1866) 12

7 Collected Works of Abraham Lincoln (Roy P. Basler ed., 1953) 2

Report of the Joint Committee on Reconstruction, at the First Session Thirty-Ninth Congress (1866) 2, 5, 6, 7

INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE[1]

Amicus Constitutional Accountability Center (CAC) is a think tank, public interest law firm, and action center dedicated to fulfilling the progressive promise of our Constitution's text and history. CAC works in our courts, through our government, and with legal scholars to improve understanding of the Constitution and to preserve the rights and freedoms it guarantees. CAC accordingly has a strong interest in this case and in the scope of the Fourteenth Amendment's protections.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

After Tyson Timbs pleaded guilty to one count of a drug offense, he was sentenced to a year of home detention followed by probation. But the State of Indiana wanted more: it authorized a civil forfeiture action to seize ownership of Timbs's personal vehicle—which was worth four times more than the maximum fine he could have received for his crime—because he drove the vehicle while committing his offense. Pet. App. 2-3, 10-12. Indiana's trial and intermediate courts ruled that imposing this penalty would violate the Excessive Fines Clause of the Eighth Amendment because it was "grossly disproportionate to the gravity of Timbs's offense," id. at 24, but the Supreme Court of Indiana refused to consider that argument. Instead, it declared that Indiana, as "a sovereign state within our

---

[1] The parties have consented to the filing of this brief and their letters of consent have been filed with the Clerk. Under Rule 37.6 of the Rules of this Court, amicus states that no counsel for a party authored this brief in whole or in part, and no counsel or party made a monetary contribution intended to fund the preparation or submission of this brief. No person other than amicus or its counsel made a monetary contribution to its preparation or submission.

federal system," has no obligation to obey the Excessive Fines Clause. Id. at 9. That conclusion is entirely at odds with the text and history of the Fourteenth Amendment, a measure adopted during this nation's Second Founding to ensure that states do not violate the fundamental liberties enshrined in the Bill of Rights.

Nearly 150 years ago, in the wake of a bloody Civil War, the Fourteenth Amendment transformed the Constitution's protection of individual rights, adding to our nation's charter a sweeping new guarantee of liberty meant to secure "the civil rights and privileges of all citizens in all parts of the republic," Report of the Joint Committee on Reconstruction, at the First Session Thirty-Ninth Congress xxi (1866), and to keep "whatever sovereignty [a State] may have in harmony with a republican form of government and the Constitution of the country," Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. 1088 (1866) (Rep. Woodbridge).

Proposed in 1866 and ratified in 1868, the Fourteenth Amendment "fundamentally altered our country's federal system," McDonald v. City of Chicago, 561 U.S. 742, 754 (2010), in order to "repair the Nation from the damage slavery had caused," id. at 807 (Thomas, J., concurring in part and concurring in the judgment), and to secure for the nation the "new birth of freedom" that President Abraham Lincoln had promised at Gettysburg, 7 Collected Works of Abraham Lincoln 23 (Roy P. Basler ed., 1953). Central to that task was ensuring state adherence to the full range of individual rights enshrined in America's founding documents, including the liberties enumerated in the Constitution and the Bill of Rights.

The Framers wrote the Fourteenth Amendment against the backdrop of a long history of state abridgement of fundamental rights. As Representative Jehu Baker put it, the Amendment was "a wholesome and needed check upon the great abuse of liberty which several of the States have practiced, and which they manifest too much purpose to continue." Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. app. 256 (1866) (Rep. Baker). The Framers were keenly aware that during slavery and in its aftermath Southern states suppressed a host of basic freedoms. Id. at 2542 (Rep. Bingham) ("many instances of State injustice and oppression have already occurred in the State legislation of this Union"). Before the Civil War, "[t]he structural imperatives of the peculiar institution led slave states to violate virtually every right and freedom declared in the Bill [of Rights] . . . . Slavery bred repression." Akhil Reed Amar, The Bill of Rights: Creation and Reconstruction 160 (1998). After the war, to retain their grip over the former slaves, governments across the South enacted Black Codes designed to coerce the freedmen back into the plantation labor system and prevent them from exercising the freedoms enjoyed by whites.

The Black Codes established a range of new crimes that were enforced through the infliction of "severe penalties," Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. 474 (1866) (Sen. Trumbull), including fines, forfeiture of property, corporal punishment, imprisonment, and forced labor, all "in punishment of crimes of the slightest magnitude," id. at 1123 (Rep. Cook). Members of Congress lambasted these measures, highlighting among other things the outlandish fines imposed by the Black Codes. See id. at 516-17, 651, 1621, 3210. Lawmakers also decried the widespread denial of property rights to the former slaves. See id. at 94, 475, 589. Such measures were seen as abridgements of fundamental rights, and the Fourteenth Amendment was adopted in part to "restrain the power of the States and compel them at all times to respect these great fundamental guarantees." Id. at 2766 (Sen. Howard).

As history shows, the Fourteenth Amendment was meant to effect a radical constitutional transformation, imposing on the states an obligation to respect the individual liberties enumerated in the Bill of Rights. "[T]he chief congressional proponents of the Fourteenth Amendment espoused the view that the Amendment made the Bill of Rights applicable to the States," McDonald, 561 U.S. at 762, and their "well-circulated speeches" informed the ratifying states and the public at large that the Amendment was meant to "enforce constitutionally declared rights against the States," id. at 833 (Thomas, J., concurring).

In this case, however, the Indiana Supreme Court renounced that promise and abdicated its responsibility to faithfully interpret and apply the Fourteenth Amendment. Although this Court has developed "well established" standards for identifying which protections in the Bill of Rights the Fourteenth Amendment makes applicable to the states, McDonald, 561 U.S. at 750, the Indiana Supreme Court refused to apply those standards or to engage in "the sort of Fourteenth Amendment inquiry required by [this Court's] cases," id. at 758 (quoting District of Columbia v. Heller, 554 U.S. 570, 620 n.23 (2008)). Instead, the court simply announced that it would "elect not to impose" on Indiana the obligations of the Excessive Fines Clause. Pet. App. 9. As shown below, that result cannot be squared with the text and history of the Fourteenth Amendment or with this Court's precedents.

ARGUMENT

I. The Fourteenth Amendment Was a Response to Rampant Infringement of Fundamental Liberties by the States, Including Deprivations of Property Rights and the Oppressive Use of Fines

After the Civil War, "[t]he overriding task confronting Congress and the new President was to restore the states that had attempted to secede to their proper place in the Union." David P. Currie, The Reconstruction Congress, 75 U. Chi. L. Rev. 383, 383 (2008). Complicating this task, the states of the ex-Confederacy remained defiant in their suppression of former slaves and their persecution of those who had opposed secession. "Congress established the Joint Committee on Reconstruction to investigate circumstances in the Southern States and to determine whether, and on what conditions, those States should be readmitted to the Union." McDonald, 561 U.S. at 827 (Thomas, J., concurring). Composed of members of the House and Senate, the Committee was given both fact-finding powers and legislative jurisdiction: it took testimony and controlled the framing of constitutional amendments and legislation concerning Reconstruction.

Based on its exhaustive investigation into conditions in the South, the Joint Committee submitted to Congress a report that "extensively catalogued the abuses of civil rights in the former slave States." Id. The report confirmed the systematic violation of fundamental rights by Southern states, demanding "changes of the organic law" to secure the "civil rights and privileges of all citizens in all parts of the republic." Report of the Joint Committee on Reconstruction, supra, at xxi.

Of central concern to the Joint Committee and other members of Congress were the Black Codes. Enacted in jurisdictions across the South after the war, these legislative measures represented an attempt to re-institutionalize slavery in a different guise—systematically violating the rights of the newly freed slaves to force them into conditions replicating the pre-war plantation system. Under "the barbarous codes which have been passed in all the rebel States," said one lawmaker, freedmen were in "a condition of nominal freedom worse than a condition of actual slavery." Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. 1839 (1866) (Rep. Clarke); see Report of the Joint Committee on Reconstruction, supra, Pt. II at 218 (testimony of Gen. Rufus Saxton) ("it will be the purpose of their former masters to reduce them as near to a condition of slaves as it will be possible to do . . . they would deprive them by severe legislation of most of the rights of freedmen"); id. Pt. II at 4 (testimony of Brevet Maj. Gen. John W. Turner) (discussing Southern refusal "to grant to the negro his civil rights—those privileges that pertain to freedom, the protection of life, liberty, and property"). As one observer put it, "the South is determined to have slavery—the thing, if not the name." Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. 94 (1865) (Sen. Sumner) (quoting report sent to Congress); see id. at 3210 (1866) (Rep. Julian) ("Cunning legislative devices are being invented in most of the States to restore slavery in fact.").

Beginning in 1865, for instance, many localities "adopted ordinances limiting black freedom of movement, prescribing severe penalties for vagrancy, and restricting blacks' right to rent or purchase real estate and engage in skilled urban jobs." Eric Foner, Reconstruction: America's Unfinished Revolution, 1863–1877, at 198 (1988); see id. at 200 ("Virtually all the former Confederate states enacted sweeping vagrancy and labor contract laws," which required freedmen to be contractually employed under terms supervised by the state.); Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. 588 (1866) (Rep. Donnelly) ("The adult negro is compelled to enter into contract with a master, and the district judge, not the laborer, is to fix the value of the labor.").

The "centerpiece" of these Codes "was the attempt to stabilize the black work force and limit its economic options apart from plantation labor. Henceforth, the state would enforce labor agreements and plantation discipline, punish those who refused to contract, and prevent whites from competing among themselves for black workers." Foner, supra, at 199; see Report of the Joint Committee on Reconstruction, supra, Pt. II at 240 (statement of Captain Alexander P. Ketchum) ("The planters are disposed . . . to insert in their contracts tyrannical provisions, to prevent the negroes from leaving the plantation . . . ."); Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. 1839 (1866) (Rep. Clarke) (citing "lately passed laws calculated to virtually make serfs of the persons that the [thirteenth] amendment made free").

The Black Codes also denied property rights to the ex-slave. "It seemed everywhere determined upon that he should not be an owner of land." Report of the Joint Committee on Reconstruction, supra, Pt. II at 243 (statement of Freedmen's Bureau officer J.W. Alvord); see, e.g., Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. 588 (1866) (Rep. Donnelly) ("The black code of Mississippi provides that no negro shall own or hire lands in the State . . . ."). Personal property was seized from blacks by bands of whites who acted with tacit or overt government approval. See id. at 94 (1865) (Sen. Sumner) (quoting report describing "the militia robbing the colored people of their property" and their weapons); id.

(quoting report describing the torture of blacks as a "means of extorting from the freed people a confession as to where they have their arms and money concealed"). "We need protection for our person and property," implored the freedmen of Tappannock, Virginia, in a letter sent to the House of Representatives in December 1865. Id. at 516 (1866).

Blacks who failed to comply with these mandatory contractual obligations violated the criminal law, and such infractions, like other violations of the Black Codes, were punished with harsh penalties that included fines, imprisonment, lashings, forced labor, and forfeiture of private property. "If employers could no longer subject blacks to corporal punishment, courts could mandate whipping as a punishment for vagrancy or petty theft. If individual whites could no longer hold blacks in involuntary servitude, courts could sentence freedmen to long prison terms, force them to labor without compensation on public works, or bind them out to white employers who would pay their fines." Foner, supra, at 205; Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. 588 (1866) (Rep. Donnelly) ("If he thinks the compensation too small and will not work, he is a vagrant, and can be hired out for a term of service at a rate . . . to be fixed by the judge."); id. at 474 (Sen. Trumbull) ("They deny them certain rights, subject them to severe penalties, and still impose upon them the very restrictions which were imposed upon them in consequence of the existence of slavery."); id. at 1123 (Rep. Cook) (citing "laws which provide for selling these men into slavery in punishment of crimes of the slightest magnitude").

A Louisiana ordinance read to the House of Representatives was typical. Among other things, it specified that a freedman who entered town limits without special permission would be punished by "imprisonment and two days' work on the public streets, or shall pay a fine of $2.50." Id. at 516 (Rep. Eliot). Blacks found on the streets after 10 p.m. without a special pass were to be "imprisoned and compelled to work five days on the public streets, or pay a fine of five dollars," and if found on the streets after 3 p.m. on a Sunday, "imprisoned and made to work two days on the public streets, or pay two dollars." Id. at 516-17. Preaching without a license was punished by "a fine of ten dollars or twenty days' work on the public streets"; a person not in military service carrying a firearm without special permission would "forfeit his weapons, and shall be imprisoned and made to work five days on the public streets, or pay a fine of five dollars"; and engaging in commercial exchanges of merchandise without special permission resulted in "the penalty of the forfeiture of said articles, and imprisonment and one day's labor, or a fine of one dollar." Id. at 517. Anyone who rented a house to blacks would "pay a fine of ten dollars for each offense." Id.

Similar measures swept the South. See, e.g., id. at 1621 (Rep. Myers) ("a vagrant in [Florida] shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500 and imprisoned for a term not exceeding twelve months, or by being sold for a term not exceeding twelve months, at the discretion of the court"); id. (Rep. Myers) (Alabama's laws, "among other harsh inflictions[,] impose an imprisonment of three months and a fine of $100 upon any one owning fire-arms, and a fine of fifty dollars and six months' imprisonment on any servant or laborer (white or black) who loiters away his time or is stubborn or refractory"); id. at 651 (Rep. Grinnell) (reporting that "[a] white man in Kentucky may keep a gun," but "if a black man buys a gun he forfeits it and pays a fine of five dollars"); id. at 2777 (Rep. Eliot) (reporting that even in the Union state of Maryland, "if a white man employ a colored clerk, the penalty is fifty dollars," that "[f]or a negro to belong to any secret society is a felony—the punishment a fine of fifty dollars," and that "'free negroes' that leave the counties and return shall be punished by fine and imprisonment" (quoting Freedmen's Bureau report)).

Formal distinctions between whites and blacks concerning fines and other punishments were supplemented by discriminatory application of the written law. A letter was read in the Senate, for instance, reporting that "in nine cases out of ten . . . where a white man has provoked an affray with a black, and savagely misused him, the black man has been fined for insolent language because he did not receive the chastisement in submissive silence, while the white man has gone free." Id. at 94 (1865) (Sen. Sumner).

As these examples illustrate, fines were used interchangeably and in combination with imprisonment and physical punishment to enforce the regime of the Black Codes. See id. at 3210 (1866) (Rep. Julian) (in South Carolina "a black man convicted of an offense who fails immediately to pay his fine is whipped"). Indeed, the infliction of excessive and unpayable fines supplied the pretext under which slavery conditions were reinstituted, as freedmen were sold into forced labor to repay those fines.

Mississippi's vagrancy law, for instance, decreed that "freedmen, free negroes and mulattoes" found "without lawful employment or business, or found unlawfully assembling themselves together," were to be fined up to fifty dollars. An Act to Amend the Vagrant Laws of the State § 2 (Nov. 24, 1865), reprinted in S. Exec. Doc. No. 39-6, at 192 (1867). The law further provided that "all fines and forfeitures collected under the provisions of this act shall be paid into the county treasury for general county purposes," and that, if anyone "shall fail for five days after the imposition of any fine or forfeiture . . . to pay the same," it became "the duty of the sheriff of the proper county to hire out said freedman, free negro or mulatto, to any person who will, for the shortest period of service, pay said fine or forfeiture." Id. § 5.

The state's reliance on outlandish fines as a tool of repression was far from unusual. Most of the Black Codes "shared key common features. Freed slaves were required to maintain employment . . . to avoid arrest for vagrancy. Black 'vagrants' were to be auctioned off as contract laborers to white employers who paid their fines." Garrett Epps, The Antebellum Political Background of the Fourteenth Amendment, 67 Law & Contemp. Probs. 175, 204 (2004). Thus, when the Commissioner of the Freedmen's Bureau compiled for the Senate a synopsis of laws concerning people of color, he called "special attention" to the South's vagrancy laws, emphasizing that "[t]he small time allowed after the expiration of one contract before a person must enter another to escape vagrancy will occasion practical slavery." He continued:

> The arrest of unemployed persons as vagrants upon information given by any party; his trial by a justice of the peace; the sale of his services at public outcry for payment of the fine and costs, without limit as to time, and whipping and working in chain-gangs, present some of the obnoxious features of these singular laws.

Letter from Maj. Gen. O.O. Howard to Sec'y of War E.M. Stanton (Dec. 21, 1866), reprinted in S. Exec. Doc. No. 39-6, at 2-3 (1867). Indeed, the Commissioner had received detailed evidence of such abuses, like the following report from Nashville, Tennessee:

> About three weeks since the police of this city arrested some forty or fifty young men and boys (colored) on various pretexts, mostly for vagrancy, and they were thrown into the work-house to work out fines of from $10 to $60 each. By an arrangement with the city recorder . . . [two] residents of this city . . . by paying their fines, induced the prisoners, as is claimed, to consent to go to Arkansas to work on a plantation. The freedmen were taken from the work-house and carried off under guard. Many of them are minors, and were taken away without the knowledge or consent of their parents.

Report from Brevet Brigadier Gen. J.R. Lewis, Assistant Comm'r, to Maj. Gen. O.O. Howard (Nov. 1, 1866), reprinted in S. Exec. Doc. No. 39-6, at 129 (1867).

Accounts of these oppressive measures reached Congress in steady reports from the South: "Every mail brings to us the records of injustice and outrage." Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. 1838 (1866) (Rep. Clarke). Lawmakers viewed such practices as violating core freedoms identified in the Bill of Rights, see id. at 1617 (Rep. Moulton) (decrying the lack of "protection to life, liberty, or property"), and condemned these laws as abridgements of fundamental liberties. "A law that does not allow a colored person to hold property . . . is certainly a law in violation of the rights of a freeman." Id. at 475 (Sen. Trumbull).

Congress first responded through legislation, enacting the Civil Rights Act of 1866 and later an expansion of the Freedmen's Bureau—both of which sought to safeguard property rights. See Act of Apr. 9, 1866, ch. 31, § 1, 14 Stat. 27, 27 ("citizens, of every race and color . . . shall have the same right . . . to inherit, purchase, lease, sell, hold, and convey real and personal property, and to full and equal benefit of all laws and proceedings for the security of person and property, as is enjoyed by white citizens"); Act of July 16, 1866, ch. 200, § 14, 14 Stat. 173, 176-77 ("the right . . . to inherit, purchase, lease, sell, hold, and convey real and personal property, and to have full and equal benefit of all laws and proceedings concerning personal liberty, personal security, and the acquisition, enjoyment, and disposition of estate, real and personal, . . . shall be secured to and enjoyed by all the citizens of such State or district without respect to race or color, or previous condition of slavery").

Proponents of these bills explicitly linked the freedoms denied to blacks in the South with the fundamental guarantees enshrined in America's founding documents. See, e.g., Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. 632 (1866) (Rep. Moulton) ("[T]he civil rights referred to in the bill are . . . the great fundamental rights that are secured by the Constitution of the United States, and that are defined in the Declaration of Independence, the right to personal liberty, the right to hold and enjoy property, to transmit property, and to make contracts."); id. at 475 (Sen. Trumbull) (describing "[t]he great fundamental rights set forth in this bill" as including "the right to acquire property . . . to make contracts, and to inherit and dispose of property"); id. at 1839 (Rep. Clarke) ("Give, then, to the freedman his inalienable rights and that full protection due to him from a nation he has fought to defend in the hour of danger.").

Congress's statutory responses to the Black Codes also took aim at excessive and discriminatory penalties. See Act of July 16, 1866, 14 Stat. at 177 ("no penalty or punishment for any violation of law shall be imposed or permitted because of race or color, or previous condition of slavery, other or greater than the penalty or punishment to which white persons may be liable by law for the like offence"); Act of Apr. 9, 1866, 14 Stat. at 27 ("citizens, of every race and color . . . shall have the same right . . . to full and equal benefit of all laws and proceedings . . . as is enjoyed by white citizens, and shall be subject to like punishment, pains, and penalties, and to none other, any law, statute, ordinance, regulation, or custom, to the contrary notwithstanding"); id. (making it a crime to subject "any inhabitant of any State or Territory . . . to different punishments, pains, or penalties on account of such person having at any time been held in a condition of slavery or involuntary servitude . . . or by reason of his color or race, than is prescribed for the punishment of white persons").

Ultimately, however, Congress "deemed these legislative remedies insufficient. Southern resistance, Presidential vetoes, and this Court's pre-Civil-War precedent persuaded Congress that a constitutional amendment was necessary to provide full protection for the rights of blacks." McDonald, 561 U.S. at 775. As one Senator explained, the newly freed slaves needed to be guaranteed "the essential safeguards of the Constitution." Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. 1183 (1866) (Sen. Pomeroy).

II. The Fourteenth Amendment Transformed the Nation's Federal System To Prevent States from Violating the Freedoms Set Forth in the Bill of Rights

In order "to provide a constitutional basis" for the protection of fundamental rights in the South, McDonald, 561 U.S. at 775, the American people transformed our federal system by adopting the Fourteenth Amendment. The debates in Congress over the Amendment confirm that its first section was understood—and described to the ratifying public—as securing against state encroachment the fundamental liberties enumerated in the Constitution and the Bill of Rights.

In the House and Senate, "the chief congressional proponents of the Fourteenth Amendment espoused the view that the Amendment made the Bill of Rights applicable to the States," id. at 762, overturning Barron v. Baltimore, 32 U.S. 243 (1833), which held that only the federal government was bound by the Bill of Rights. See Adamson v. California, 332 U.S. 46, 72 (1947) (Black, J., dissenting) ("With full knowledge of the import of the Barron decision, the framers and backers of the Fourteenth Amendment proclaimed its purpose to be to overturn the constitutional rule that case had announced.").

Section One of the Fourteenth Amendment was the brainchild of Ohio congressman John Bingham, who served on the Joint Committee on Reconstruction. Introducing his draft of the Amendment in February 1866, "Bingham began by discussing Barron and its holding that the Bill of Rights did not apply to the States. He then argued that a constitutional amendment was necessary to provide 'an express grant of power in Congress to enforce by penal enactment these great canons of the supreme law, securing to all the citizens in every State all the privileges and immunities of citizens, and to all the people all the sacred rights of person.'" McDonald, 561 U.S. at 829 (Thomas, J., concurring) (quoting Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. 1089-90 (1866)). "Bingham emphasized that § 1 was designed 'to arm the Congress of the United States, by the consent of the people of the United States, with the power to enforce the bill of rights as it stands in the Constitution today.'" Id. (quoting Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. 1088 (1866)).

This speech was "broadly distributed" in pamphlet form, bearing the subtitle "In Support of the Proposed Amendment to Enforce the Bill of Rights," and the speech received widespread newspaper coverage as well. Id. at 829-30 (Thomas, J., concurring).

The next month, Bingham "delivered a second well-publicized speech, again arguing that a constitutional amendment was required to give Congress the power to enforce the Bill of Rights against the States." Id. at 831 (Thomas, J., concurring). This speech was also "extensively published." Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. 1837 (1866) (Rep. Lawrence).

In April, the Joint Committee unveiled a revised draft of the Amendment, which contained in its present form the sweeping guarantee of fundamental rights and liberties set forth in the Amendment's first section:

> No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 1; see Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. 2764 (1866). "Senator Jacob Howard, who spoke on behalf of the Joint Committee on Reconstruction and sponsored the Amendment in the Senate, stated that the Amendment protected all of 'the personal rights guarantied and secured by the first eight amendments of the Constitution.'" McDonald, 561 U.S. at 762 n.9 (quoting Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. 2765 (1866)). "Howard explained that the Constitution recognized 'a mass of privileges, immunities, and rights, some of them secured by the second section of the fourth article of the Constitution, . . .

some by the first eight amendments of the Constitution,' and that 'there is no power given in the Constitution to enforce and to carry out any of these guarantees' against the States." Id. at 831-32 (Thomas, J., concurring) (quoting Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. 2765 (1866)). "Howard then stated that 'the great object' of § 1 was to 'restrain the power of the States and compel them at all times to respect these great fundamental guarantees.'" Id. at 832 (Thomas, J., concurring) (quoting Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. 2766 (1866)). "News of Howard's speech was carried in major newspapers across the country . . . ." Id.

"Finally, Representative Thaddeus Stevens, the political leader of the House and acting chairman of the Joint Committee on Reconstruction," also made explicit the import of the Amendment, stating "during the debates on the Amendment that 'the Constitution limits only the action of Congress, and is not a limitation on the States. This amendment supplies that defect, and allows Congress to correct the unjust legislation of the States.'" Id. at 762 n.9 (quoting Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. 2459 (1866)).

"As a whole, these well-circulated speeches indicate that § 1 was understood to enforce constitutionally declared rights against the States . . . ." Id. at 833 (Thomas, J., concurring). "[N]ot a single person in either house spoke up to deny these men's interpretation of section I." Amar, supra, at 187; see Robert J. Kaczorowski, Revolutionary Constitutionalism in the Era of the Civil War and Reconstruction, 61 N.Y.U. L. Rev. 863, 934 (1986) ("The amendment's author, House and Senate floor leaders, and a number of proponents and opponents expressed the belief that it secured Bill of Rights guarantees. Not one senator or congressman denied that the amendment's framers and supporters intended to secure the Bill of Rights, or expressed an intention to exclude Bill of Rights guarantees from the rights Congress sought to secure.").

The Amendment's fate was not settled by Congress, of course, but by the states, where it was sent for ratification after both Houses approved it in June 1866. Ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment was the key political issue of the day. In the congressional elections of 1866, the Amendment was the main plank of the Republican platform, while "opposition to the Amendment [was] the focus of the Democratic platform." Kurt T. Lash, The Origins of the Privileges or Immunities Clause, Part III: Andrew Johnson and the Constitutional Referendum of 1866, 101 Geo. L.J. 1275, 1279 (2013); id. (President Johnson's "sustained attempt to defeat the Amendment . . . helped shape public understanding of the proposed text and its impact on the autonomy of the states"). "More than anything else, the election became a referendum on the Fourteenth Amendment. Seldom, declared the New York Times, had a political contest been conducted 'with so exclusive reference to a single issue.'" Foner, supra, at 267 (quoting N.Y. Times, Oct. 11, 1866).

The 1866 elections resulted in a landslide victory for the Fourteenth Amendment's supporters in the Republican Party. Id. These decisive results turned the tide in favor of ratification, which was finally achieved in July 1868. During the intervening months, the Amendment's proponents "continued to stress the need to protect the enumerated constitutional rights of American citizens against abridgment by the states," Lash, supra, at 1325, and that "'[t]his protection must be coextensive with the whole Bill of Rights,'" id. (quoting N.Y. Times, Nov. 15, 1866). As more and more states voted on ratification, "the idea that the amendment would bind the states to enforce personal liberties enumerated in the Bill of Rights was no longer (if it ever was) a disputed proposition. No one argued the point. The debate involved whether this was a good idea." Id. at 1326; see Michael Kent Curtis, No State Shall Abridge: The Fourteenth Amendment and the Bill of Rights 147 (1986) (explaining that the records of the ratifying legislatures, though sparse, are "fully consistent with an intent to apply the Bill of Rights to the states").

After the Fourteenth Amendment's ratification, even Southern opponents of civil rights recognized that the Amendment prohibited the states from violating the Excessive Fines Clause and other constitutional protections. Representative Roger Mills of Texas, while arguing that any legislation promoting equality in public accommodations would be unconstitutional, said it was "clear" that "the privileges and immunities mentioned in the fourteenth amendment" included the rights enumerated in the Constitution and the Bill of Rights: "These privileges are, among others . . . immunity from excessive bail, excessive fines, and cruel and unusual punishments, and many others, all of which are recognized and guaranteed in the Constitution." 2 Cong. Rec. 384-85 (1874).

Senator Thomas Norwood of Georgia similarly described "the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States" as including "immunity . . . . from excessive fines," along with the other protections listed in the Bill of Rights. Id. app. 241. Before the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment, Senator Norwood explained, > any State might have established a particular religion, or restricted freedom of speech and of the press, or the right to bear arms, compelled a prisoner to testify against himself, imposed excessive fines and bail, inflicted unusual and cruel punishment, and so on. A State could > have deprived its citizens of any of the privileges and immunities contained in those eight articles, but the Federal Government could not. . . . The people of the United States thereby laid upon the States the same inhibition which they laid seventy years ago on the United States. . . . And the instant the fourteenth amendment became a part of the Constitution, every State was that moment disabled from making or enforcing any law which would deprive any citizen of a State of the benefits enjoyed by citizens of the United States under the first eight amendments to the Federal Constitution.

Id. app. 242.

In sum, "critical aspects of the Nation's history . . . underscored the need for, and wide agreement upon, federal enforcement of constitutionally enumerated rights against the States." McDonald, 561 U.S. at 841 (Thomas, J., concurring). To achieve that end, the Fourteenth Amendment was adopted to effect a radical constitutional transformation—one that would impose on the states an obligation to respect certain fundamental guarantees, and in particular the individual liberties enumerated in the federal Bill of Rights.

III. The Fourteenth Amendment's Text and History Require Applying the Excessive Fines Clause to the States

The Fourteenth Amendment's promise of liberty would be an empty one if states were given free rein to abrogate the safeguards set forth in the Constitution and the Bill of Rights. Yet that is what happened here. In the proceedings below, Indiana's trial and intermediate courts agreed that penalizing Tyson Timbs by forfeiting his personal vehicle was "excessive" and "grossly disproportionate to the gravity of Timbs's offense," in violation of the Eighth Amendment's Excessive Fines Clause. Pet. App. 24. But the Indiana Supreme Court refused even to consider that argument, instead explaining that it would "elect" not to enforce the Clause against Indiana. Id. at 9. Declaring that "Indiana is a sovereign state within our federal system," the court asserted that it would "decline to subject Indiana to a federal test." Id.

That result is indefensible. Allowing Indiana or any other state to violate the Excessive Fines Clause is at odds with the Fourteenth Amendment's text and history and with this Court's precedents.

This Court has already "held that most of the provisions of the Bill of Rights apply with full force to both the Federal Government and the States." McDonald, 561 U.S. at 750. While the Court has not taken the position that the Fourteenth Amendment's Privileges and Immunities Clause categorically extends the entire Bill of Rights to the states, it has adopted "a process of 'selective incorporation'" under which the Amendment's Due Process Clause has been found to "fully incorporate[] particular rights contained in the first eight Amendments." Id. at 763; cf. Akhil Reed Amar, America's Constitution: A Biography 389 (2005) ("[S]keptics have raised important questions about the peculiar manner in which the Court eventually came to apply the Bill of Rights to the states . . . . But none of the skeptics' objections is a good argument against incorporation per se, as distinct from the particular manner in which the Court has effected and explained its doctrine.").

Under this process of "selective incorporation," a "well established" standard now governs whether a protection secured by the Bill of Rights applies to the states through the Fourteenth Amendment.

McDonald, 561 U.S. at 763, 750. That standard asks whether the right at issue "is fundamental to our scheme of ordered liberty" or "deeply rooted in this Nation's history and tradition." Id. at 767 (citing Duncan v. Louisiana, 391 U.S. 145, 149 (1968), and Washington v. Glucksberg, 521 U.S. 702, 721 (1997)) (emphasis omitted). To answer those questions, this Court has looked to ancient legal codes, the 1689 English Bill of Rights, the common law and its prominent expounders such as Blackstone, the views of the American colonists in the Revolutionary era, early American state constitutions, records of the drafting and ratifying of the Constitution and Bill of Rights, and evidence surrounding the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment. See id. at 767-78.

By those metrics, as Timbs has demonstrated, freedom from excessive fines is "fundamental to our scheme of ordered liberty," Pet'r Br. 8 (quoting McDonald, 561 U.S. at 767), a vital protection against "the potential for governmental abuse of its prosecutorial power," Browning-Ferris Indus. of Vt., Inc. v. Kelco Disposal, Inc., 492 U.S. 257, 266 (1989) (quotation marks omitted). Such freedom is therefore one of the "fundamental guarantees" that it was "the great object" of the Fourteenth Amendment to secure against state encroachment. Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. 2766 (1866) (Sen. Howard); see Pet'r Br. 8-25.

Treating freedom from excessive fines as a second-class right would be particularly inexcusable given that the Fourteenth Amendment was adopted, at least in part, in response to the Southern states' use of fines to suppress African Americans and force them to serve their former masters. See supra, Part I. Flouting the lessons of that history, the Indiana Supreme Court's distorted view of the Fourteenth Amendment would allow states to impose any fines they wish, no matter how excessive and out of line with fundamental principles of justice.

This history also illustrates why it would be anomalous to require states to obey the Eighth Amendment's bans on excessive bail and on cruel and unusual punishments—see Schilb v. Kuebel, 404 U.S. 357, 365 (1971); Robinson v. California, 370 U.S. 660, 667 (1962)—while permitting those states to violate the same Amendment's ban on excessive fines. As the drafters and ratifiers of the Fourteenth Amendment were aware, oppressive fines were used in tandem with imprisonment and corporal punishment as part of an overarching effort "to restore slavery in fact" throughout the post–Civil War South. Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. 3210 (1866) (Rep. Julian). And today, just as in the mid-nineteenth century, fines "can effectively control a person's life, strip them of their property, and deprive them of their freedom," while remaining "prone to abuse, with the government's impulse to raise 'royal revenue' competing with its duty to act fairly and justly." Pet'r Br. 26 (quoting Browning-Ferris, 492 U.S. at 271).

The Indiana Supreme Court defended its refusal "to subject Indiana to a federal test" by observing that doing so "may operate to impede development of our own excessive-fines jurisprudence under the Indiana Constitution." Pet. App. 9. To be sure, adhering to the guarantees of our national charter may limit a state's options, but that is the very point of those guarantees. As this Court has explained: "Incorporation always restricts experimentation and local variations," because "'[t]he enshrinement of constitutional rights necessarily takes certain policy choices off the table.'" McDonald, 561 U.S. at 790 (quoting Heller, 554 U.S. at 636). While "the right of a State to regulate the conduct of its citizens is undoubtedly a very broad and extensive one, and not to be lightly restricted," there "are certain fundamental rights which this right of regulation cannot infringe." The Slaughter-House Cases, 83 U.S. 36, 114 (1872) (Bradley, J., dissenting).

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment of the Indiana Supreme Court should be reversed.

Respectfully submitted,

ELIZABETH B. WYDRA
BRIANNE J. GOROD*
DAVID H. GANS
BRIAN R. FRAZELLE
CONSTITUTIONAL
ACCOUNTABILITY CENTER
1200 18th Street NW, Suite 501
Washington, D.C. 20036
(202) 296-6889
brianne@theusconstitution.org

September 11, 2018

* Counsel of Record