Statement of Interest<sup>1</sup>

Andrew Ault, Esq., Jeff Cardella, Esq., and Todd Ess, Esq., Amici Curiae, are criminal defense lawyers in Indianapolis, Indiana and frequently represent defendants in criminal proceedings in Indiana state court, claimants in related state civil forfeiture proceedings and, on occasion, family members and co-claimants of defendants. As attorneys whose clients are adversely affected by the Indiana Supreme Court's holding in State v. Timbs, 84 N.E.3d 1179 (Ind. 2017), Amici have an interest in ensuring that their clients obtain the protection of the Excessive Fines Clause of the Eighth Amendment.

Mr. Cardella was lead counsel in Washington v. Marion County Prosecutor, 1:16-cv-02980-JMS, where District Judge Magnus-Stimson granted class certification and held that the State's forfeiture law violated the Eighth Amendment. See Washington v. Marion County Prosecutor, 264 F. Supp. 3d 957 (S.D. Ind. 2017). The Indiana forfeiture law permitted the indefinite retention of property pending a forfeiture trial which the district court found to be unconstitutional. The legislature has since amended the statute and the parties are litigating whether the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit should vacate the appeal due to changes to the statute.

Summary of the Argument

Indiana's civil forfeiture law is used for the benefit of the State and not its citizens. Incorporation of the Eighth Amendment's Excessive Fines Clause against the State is essential to the protection of the public against abuses and inequities of forfeiture law, practice and procedure.

Indiana's forfeiture law lacks meaningful innocent owner provisions. Under Indiana law, owners of any property (except vehicles) subject to forfeiture have no right to assert an innocent owner defense. Even the State's application of Indiana's innocent owner provision for vehicles has been construed against claimants.

There are no civil forfeiture jury trials in Indiana. Although the State permits jury trials for infractions such as speeding, the Indiana Supreme Court does not allow jury trials in civil forfeiture proceedings. Civil forfeiture in Indiana is treated as an equitable proceeding that is decided by a judge, not a jury.

Finally, the State's policies, procedures and lack of oversight of forfeiture practices and the substantial proceeds generated have created a "policing for profit" system that operates efficiently for law enforcement but disserves the public. Indiana's Constitution provides that all forfeited funds must be deposited into the Common School Fund and lent to the counties for school construction. State legislation has unabashedly violated that constitutional mandate. Under Indiana's forfeiture law, law enforcement keeps most of the forfeited funds despite the plain language of the State Constitution which prohibits this practice. Smaller counties in Indiana hire private attorneys to prosecute civil forfeiture actions and Indiana law requires that those attorneys be paid on a contingency basis, creating conflicts of interest and violations of due process. Not long ago, a county hired a part-time salaried assistant district attorney who prosecuted criminal cases for the county and simultaneously handled the related civil forfeiture matters on a contingency fee basis. See In re McKinney, 948 N.E.2d 1154, 1157 (Ind. 2011) (imposing 120-day suspension against the respondent attorney).

I. Indiana's Excessive Civil Forfeitures

The question presented is whether the Eighth Amendment's Excessive Fines Clause is incorporated against states under the Fourteenth Amendment. The Court's ruling will immediately impact Tyson Timbs, whose 2012 Land Rover LR2, valued at $42,000, was forfeited because he made a pair of two-gram sales of heroin to an undercover police officer for $535 in total. The trial court found that the forfeiture was excessive. The Indiana Court of Appeals affirmed but the Indiana Supreme Court reversed on the ground that the trial court erred by even conducting an excessiveness inquiry.

Amici regularly represent people like Mr. Timbs and his family. In our experience, Indiana forfeits property such as automobiles more often than it does homes or businesses. For a State that has applied the automobile exception to the Fourth Amendment sparingly, Indiana's focus on vehicle forfeiture is ironic. The Indiana Supreme Court has declined to apply several warrantless search exceptions to an automobile and in doing so has provided a unique rationale:

Americans in general love their cars. It is, however, particularly important, in the state which hosts the Indy 500 automobile race, to recognize that cars are sources of pride, status, and identity that transcend their objective attributes. We are extremely hesitant to countenance their casual violation, even by law enforcement officers who are attempting to solve serious crimes.

Brown v. State, 653 N.E.2d 77, 80 (Ind. 1985).

Often the property owner is not the wrongdoer. Our experience is that law enforcement will seize a car involved in a single drug transaction even if the owner was not in the vehicle at the time the crime occurred. Incorporation of the Excessive Fines Clause is needed to protect innocent family member-owners in those circumstances. Otherwise, they will continue to be short-changed of essential due process in Indiana. Our experience and views as defense lawyers are not unique. Indiana Court of Appeals Judge Barnes acknowledged in this case that he was “keenly aware” of:

the overreach some law enforcement agencies have exercised in some of these cases. Entire family farms are sometimes forfeited based on one family member's conduct, or exorbitant amounts of money are seized.

Indiana v. Timbs, 62 N.E.3d 472, 478 (Ind. Ct. App. 2016).

One element of an Excessive Fines Clause analysis is whether the forfeiture would destroy a defendant's future livelihood. See United States v. Viloski, 814 F.3d 104, 112 (2d Cir. 2016). A number of our clients' vehicles have been forfeited based on the vehicle's involvement in a small number of drug transactions, or sometimes only one transaction. Many times the transaction was conducted by a relative who borrowed the vehicle.

In our experience, the vehicle subject to forfeiture is usually one of the only assets owned by the claimant and his family. Forfeiture can result in the loss of a job, the inability to pick up children at school or not transporting elderly relatives to medical appointments. The vehicle is not just the client's most significant asset, it is an indispensable part of the client's daily life. See Krimstock v. Kelly, 306 F.3d 40, 61 (2d Cir. 2002) ("The particular importance of motor vehicles derives from their use as a mode of transportation and, for some, the means to earn a livelihood. An 'individual has an important interest in the possession of his [or her] motor vehicle,' which is 'often his [or her] most valuable possession.'" (brackets in original); Coleman v. Watt, 40 F.3d 255, 260-61 (8th Cir. 1994) ("Automobiles occupy a central place in the lives of most Americans, providing access to jobs, schools, and recreation as well as to the daily necessities of life."); Stypmann v. City & County of San Francisco, 557 F.2d 1338, 1342-43 (9th Cir. 1977) ("The private interest in the uninterrupted use of an automobile is substantial. A person's ability to make a living and his access to both the necessities and amenities of life may depend upon the availability of an automobile when needed.").

The Indiana Supreme Court's decision in this case has a substantial and harmful impact on our clients who should have the right to challenge a forfeiture as unconstitutionally excessive.

II. Incorporation of the Eighth Amendment is Necessary Because Indiana's Civil Forfeiture Statute Lacks Any Significant Protections for Property Owners.

Indiana does not protect the rights of forfeiture claimants. Incorporation of the Eighth Amendment's Excessive Fines Clause is necessary in order to accord safeguards for property owners.

This Court's incorporation decision will provide much needed guidance to the lower courts and the Indiana legislature. Determining that states are bound by the Eighth Amendment's Excessive Fines Clause will reduce the fundamental unfairness of civil forfeiture as currently practiced and promote the public's respect for the rule of law.

1. Indiana Does Not Protect "Innocent Owners."

Indiana's forfeiture law applies to all types of property, including currency, vehicles, real and personal property. Ind. Code § 34-24-1-1. The statute reaches criminal proceeds and instrumentalities of crimes. The statute reaches all vehicles that are "used or [] intended for use . . . to transport or in any manner to facilitate the transportation of" various schedule I, II, III, IV and V controlled substances. Ind. Code § 34-24-1-1(a)(1). The Code authorizes the forfeiture of "[r]eal property owned by a person who uses it to commit any" of a long list of enumerated felonies including dealing in schedule I, II, III, and IV controlled substances. Section 34-24-1-1(d) creates a statutory presumption that money found near a person engaged in drug transactions is prima facie subject to forfeiture:

money found on or near a person who is committing, attempting to commit, or conspires to commit any of the specifically enumerated offenses, is presumed forfeitable – period.

Caudill v. State, 613 N.E.2d 433, 438 (Ind. Ct. App. 1993).

Section 34-24-1-1 is draconian and not countered by any meaningful protection for innocent owners, co-owners and family members, all of whom share a financial stake, ownership and/or control over the property, and face an uphill battle to protect their rights. Indiana's innocent owner provision applies only to forfeitures of vehicles. The sole provision on burden of proof for innocent ownership provides:

At the hearing, the prosecuting attorney must show by a preponderance of the evidence that the property was within the definition of property subject to seizure under section 1 [IC 34-24-1-1] of this chapter. If the property seized was a vehicle, the prosecuting attorney must also show by a preponderance of the evidence that a person who has an ownership interest of record in the bureau of motor vehicles knew or had reason to know that the vehicle was being used in the commission of the offense.

Ind. Code § 34-24-1-4(a) (emphasis added).<sup>2</sup>

Vehicle owners have the opportunity to assert an innocent owner defense. Owners of real property and currency do not. Judge Barnes, in his dissenting opinion, observed that “Entire family farms are sometimes forfeited based on one family member's conduct, or exorbitant amounts of money are seized.” Timbs, 62 N.E.3d at 478. Yet, these family members have no ability to challenge the forfeiture in Indiana as innocent owners. Given that real estate is commonly held jointly by family members, innocent owners in Indiana are defenseless and can lose their property to the State. This contrasts sharply with federal forfeiture where courts apply an excessive fines analysis and prohibit the forfeiture of real estate simply due to one family member’s criminal activity. United States v. von Hofe, 492 F.3d 175, 184 (2d Cir. 2007) (forfeiture of wife’s interest in the family home based on husband’s marijuana operation was unconstitutional under the Eighth Amendment). See also United States v. Ferro, 681 F.3d 1105 (9th Cir. 2012) (rejecting forfeiture of antique gun collection on Eighth Amendment grounds).

The statute provides that after the State forfeits co-owned property, the innocent co-owner can redeem the property by paying the State the value of the wrongdoer’s interest. Ind. Code § 34-24-1-5. If the co-owner can make this payment, she/he can recover the property free and clear. This provision only applies to owners who did not know about the criminal conduct.

This Court has struggled with the rights of innocent owners and has affirmed forfeitures of their property. Van Oster v. Kansas, 272 U.S. 465 (1926) (forfeiture of co-owned vehicle); Dobbins's Distillery v. United States, 96 U.S. 395, 401 (1878) (forfeiture of real estate used improperly by lessee). More recently, in Bennis v. Michigan, 516 U.S. 442 (1996), the Court confronted forfeitures more akin to the types Amici observe, namely adjudicating a claim filed by a family member at risk of losing property because of a loved one's crimes. In Bennis, the claimant's vehicle was forfeited under Michigan's nuisance law because the claimant's husband used the car to solicit a prostitute and engaged in sex inside of the vehicle. There was no dispute that the husband was not authorized to use the vehicle for this purpose and no evidence existed that the claimant knew or should have known of his conduct. The Michigan Supreme Court nevertheless upheld the forfeiture and this Court affirmed. Chief Justice Rehnquist recognized the absence of fundamental unfairness in that case:

At bottom, petitioner's claims depend on an argument that the Michigan forfeiture statute is unfair because it relieves prosecutors from the burden of separating co-owners who are complicit in the wrongful use of property from innocent co-owners.

This argument, in the abstract, has considerable appeal . . . Its force is reduced in the instant case, however, by the Michigan Supreme Court's confirmation of the trial court's remedial discretion . . . and petitioner's recognition that Michigan may forfeit her and her husband's car whether or not she is entitled to an offset for her interest in it...

Id. at 453. Justice Thomas wrote a concurring opinion, joined by Justice Ginsburg, which identified the randomness of the risks to the innocent owner that are posed by forfeiture laws:

The limits on what property can be forfeited as a result of what wrongdoing -- for example, what it means to "use" property in crime for purposes of forfeiture law -- are not clear to me...Those limits, whatever they may be, become especially significant when they are the sole restrictions on the state's ability to take property from those it merely suspects, or does not even suspect, of colluding in crime.

Improperly used, forfeiture could become more like a roulette wheel employed to raise revenue from innocent but hapless owners whose property is unforeseeably misused, or a tool wielded to punish those who associate with criminals, than a component of a system of justice. When the property sought to be forfeited has been entrusted by its owner to one who uses it for crime, however, the Constitution apparently assigns to the States and to the political branches of the Federal Government the primary responsibility for avoiding that result.

Id. at 455 & 456-457 (citation omitted) (emphasis in original).

Indiana affords no protection for innocent owners of real property and minimal protections for innocent owners of vehicles. A meaningful opportunity to mitigate harm to innocent owners should be a necessary element of any forfeiture proceeding. Permitting claimants to raise a defense under the Eighth Amendment's Excessive Fines Clause is particularly important in Indiana which denies an innocent owner so many other basic legal protections.

2. Indiana Does Not Permit Jury Trials for Civil Forfeiture

Indiana denies claimants the right to a jury trial. Amici are not asking this Court to decide whether this core right should be incorporated. Amici simply wish to inform the Court that this fundamental right is not available to claimants in Indiana, unlike in the vast majority of states.

“The right to have a jury make the ultimate determination of guilt has an impressive pedigree.” United States v. Gaudin, 515 U.S. 506, 510 (1995). It dates back centuries:

The history of trial by jury in criminal cases has been frequently told. It is sufficient for present purposes to say that by the time our Constitution was written, jury trial in criminal cases had been in existence in England for several centuries and carried impressive credentials traced by many to Magna Carta. Its preservation and proper operation as a protection against arbitrary rule were among the major objectives of the revolutionary settlement which was expressed in the Declaration and Bill of Rights of 1689.

Duncan v. Louisiana, 391 U.S. 145, 151 (1968) (footnotes omitted). While this Court has held that forfeiture is punitive, United States v. Bajakajian, 524 U.S. 321, 334 (1998), it retains a civil character. A claimant has the right under the Seventh Amendment to a jury trial in a civil forfeiture proceeding. United States v. One 1976 Mercedes Benz, 618 F.2d 453, 454-469 (7th Cir. 1980). The court of appeals in One 1976 Mercedes Benz focused on the dichotomy between forfeitures under maritime law and those brought “on land” where jury trials were always permitted and traced the right to a jury trial in civil forfeiture back to 1791, commenting that “[i]t is difficult to imagine how a proceeding to enforce a statutory forfeiture can resemble in any respect a suit in equity.” Id., 458-459. The court noted that this proposition was first articulated by Justice Marshal (id. (quoting The Sarah, 21 U.S. (8 Wheat.) 391, 394, 5 L. Ed. 644 (1823))), and that the right remained enshrined in the law, citing Rogers v. Loether, 467 F.2d 1110, 1123 n. 44 (7th Cir. 1972) (Stevens, J.) (“Except in admiralty, forfeiture cases are triable to a jury.”), aff’d sub nom, Curtis v. Loether, 415 U.S. 189 (1974).

This historical trend clashes with Hoosier jurisprudence. The Seventh Amendment right to a jury trial is not incorporated into the Bill of Rights. McDonald v. City of Chicago, 561 U.S. 742, 765 n.13 (2010). Absent a state constitutional provision, legislation by the Indiana legislature, or a decision by the Indiana courts, Hoosiers do not have a right to a jury trial. The Indiana Bill of Rights which grants trials by jury has not been extended to forfeiture. See Ind. Constitution, Article I, Section 20. The Indiana Supreme Court held more than a 100 years ago that there is no right to a jury because forfeiture is a statutory proceeding. Campbell v. State, 87 N.E. 212, 215 (1909).

The Indiana Court of Appeals revisited the issue 90 years later:

[W]e think that the forfeiture of vehicles, money, personal assets, and other property serves remedial, non-punitive purposes. One is creating an economic disincentive to engage in proscribed behavior by subjecting to forfeiture those items “traceable” to criminal activity. By denying individuals the ability to profit from ill-gotten gain, an action for forfeiture resembles an equitable action for disgorgement [sic] or restitution. In addition, by allowing law enforcement officials to recoup the cost of drug operations from the proceeds of forfeited items, the statute helps to finance the State's legitimate interest in enforcing its anti-drug-trafficking laws. Given these remedial purposes, we do not think that the sometimes harsh effects of I.C. 34-4-30.1 override our conclusion that the General Assembly intended this as a civil action.

Caudill v State, 613 N.E.2d 433, 437 (Ind. Ct. App. 1993).

The right to a jury trial is a common protection for property owners in other states but not in Indiana. Indiana extends the right to a jury trial to nearly all other actions brought by the State.

See, e.g., Schumm v. State, 886 N.E.2d 781, 786-90 (Ind. Ct. App. 2007) (reversing judgment on a Batson challenge in a case involving a traffic infraction citation for operating a vehicle with improper tail lights).

III. Indiana’s “Policing for Profit” Violates the Due Process Clause.

Where a law enforcement agency’s priorities and actions are influenced, if not driven, by the revenue that it expects to receive from forfeitures, there is a substantial likelihood that the entire forfeiture program violates the Fourteenth Amendment’s Due Process Clause. This Court has provided guidance on when a prosecutor or his office has a financial interest in the outcome of a penalty-based proceeding. In Marshall v. Jerrico, Inc., 446 U.S. 238, 250 (1980), the Court rejected a claim that the Due Process Clause was violated where 1% of an agency’s budget consisted of funds collected from its civil enforcement actions. However, the Court cautioned:

A scheme injecting a personal interest, financial or otherwise, into the enforcement process may bring irrelevant or impermissible factors into the prosecutorial decision and in some contexts raise serious constitutional questions.

Id. at 250. “Policing for profit” occurs when police and prosecutors select cases based on the opportunity to supplement their budgets. Indiana’s forfeiture laws have created a program of policing for profit and incorporating the Eighth Amendment’s Excessive Fines Clause will help mitigate or eliminate the ill effects of this system.

1. Local Law Enforcement Regularly Violates Its Duties under the Indiana State Constitution

In 1851, the State held a constitutional convention which amended the State Constitution to create a Common School Fund. The relevant provision states:

Knowledge and learning, generally diffused throughout a community, being essential to the preservation of a free government; it shall be the duty of the General Assembly to encourage, by all suitable means, moral, intellectual, scientific, and agricultural improvement; and to provide, by law, for a general and uniform system of Common Schools, wherein tuition shall be without charge, and equally open to all.

Ind. Constitution, Article 8, Section 1.

The State Constitution directs that financing for education will be provided by the Common School Fund, which in turn would be funded by several sources including “the fines assessed for breaches of the penal laws of the State; and from all forfeitures which may accrue.” Ind. Constitution, Art. 8, § 2; see also Ind. Code § 20-42-1-3 (“Sources of Funds”). The Common School Fund operates as an endowment for the permanent financing of public education in Indiana:

The principal of the Common School fund shall remain a perpetual fund, which may be increased, but shall never be diminished; and the income thereof shall be inviolably appropriated to the support of Common Schools, and to no other purpose whatever.

Ind. Const. Art. 8, § 3 (emphasis added). The fund lends money at favorable interest rates to municipalities for education-related construction projects.

Although the State Constitution provides that all forfeited funds must be deposited into the Common School Fund, the Indiana legislature has ignored this mandate by permitting law enforcement agencies to fund their operations with money raised from the sale of forfeited assets. The Indiana Supreme Court has stated in dicta that this process may be unconstitutional. Serrano v. State, 946 N.E.2d 1139, 1146 n.3 (2011). That court is revisiting the issue this year in Horner v Curry, 2018 Ind. LEXIS 472 (order transferring jurisdiction, dated June 19, 2018, and denying request for expedited appeal).

Historically, state law enforcement agencies have been permitted to recoup their costs from forfeited assets. Ind. Code § 34-24-1-4(d) (2017). News media reports have claimed that state law enforcement has circumvented the Common School Fund mandate by claiming that the forfeiture proceeds were less than their costs. In 2011, the Indianapolis Star reported that “many of the state’s 92 counties, including Marion, have been hoarding all of their forfeiture money for years, never sending any to the school fund.”<sup>3</sup> The Indianapolis Star reported that only:

five [out of 92] counties submitted any forfeiture money to the Common School Fund from Jan. 1, 2008, to Feb. 25, 2010, according to records provided by the state treasurer’s office. The grand total: $99,490.

Id. (bracketed materials added). In 2015, the Indianapolis Star reported that Marion County, home to Indianapolis, the largest city in Indiana, kept all forfeited funds for itself and did not deposit any funds into the Common School Fund.<sup>4</sup> The article also reported that these funds were used to pay law enforcement costs.

At a 2017 Indiana legislative hearing on forfeiture reform, one local prosecutor admitted to policing for profit:

I'm not going to hire anybody to do forfeitures to collect money for the State of Indiana. If my office isn't getting money, I'm not going to be able to pay them for that, and—why am I going to do the extra work and not have some benefit that comes out of it?<sup>5</sup>

At another hearing in 2017, the prosecuting attorney for Delaware County acknowledged that forfeiture helps fund law enforcement without raising taxes.<sup>6</sup> forfeiture cases. The statistics in reports for the last two years indicate that only a tiny fraction of forfeiture proceeds is transferred to the Common School Fund:

	Forfeited Cash &amp; Auction Proceeds	Payments to Common School Fund
2016 <sup>7</sup>	$1,802,941.44	$31,443.12
2017 <sup>8</sup>	$3,394,266.28	$62,952.71

Earlier this year, the legislature enacted Senate Enrolled Act 99 (“SEA 99”), which slightly changed the allocation structure. Previously, municipalities were permitted to determine their costs. Now, municipalities are permitted by law to keep the bulk of the forfeited property.

Section 3 of SEA 99, codified at Ind. Code § 34-24-1-8(d)(3), provides that, after paying a contingency fee to a private attorney, the prosecuting county keeps one-third of the forfeiture to cover its costs. Id. Of the remaining funds, 85% is paid to the general fund of the jurisdiction which handled the prosecution. Id.

Despite the plain language of the State Constitution, State law still permits law enforcement to keep the bulk of the forfeited proceeds. As noted above, the Indiana Supreme Court will soon decide if the statute violates Indiana's Constitution.

2. Indiana Has Privatized Civil Forfeiture

The prosecutor's role in forfeiture has been privatized. Many smaller municipalities retain private lawyers to prosecute forfeiture cases on a contingency fee basis. Thus, the prosecuting attorney has a personal financial interest in the outcome of the litigation, thereby bringing "irrelevant or impermissible factors" into the forfeiture. Marshall, 446 U.S. at 250.

The most notorious example of prosecuting for forfeiture dollars involved Mark McKinney, a deputy prosecuting attorney in Delaware County whose seat is Muncie. McKinney simultaneously represented the State in the criminal proceedings as a part-time paid employee and prosecuted the civil forfeiture as a part-time contractor on a contingency fee basis:

Respondent at times engaged in plea agreement negotiations regarding criminal cases with criminal defendants before and/or after Respondent also engaged in ... settlement negotiations regarding related civil forfeiture actions with the same criminal defendants. Respondent did this knowing that he would receive payment as personal compensation equaling 25% of the amount transferred as a result of the action.

In re McKinney, 948 N.E.2d 1154, 1157 (2011). The Indiana Supreme Court imposed a 120-day suspension against McKinney.

Earlier this year, the Indiana Legislature enacted the aforementioned forfeiture reform, SEA 99. Section 5 of SEA 99, codified at Ind. Code § 34-24-1-8, makes it mandatory that, if a county retains a private attorney, the county must pay the attorney on a contingency fee basis.<sup>9</sup> The rates of the fee agreement are set forth in the statute which provides a minimum fee of $100 per case and a contingency recovery as follows: one-third of the first $10,000 recovery; 20% of the portion of any recovery that exceeds $10,000 but is less than $100,000, and 15% of any recovery over $100,000. See Ind. Code § 34-24-1-8(d). The court may permit the private attorney to seek additional fees over the amounts set by statute. Ind. Code § 34-24-1-8(e).

Between contingency payments to contract lawyers and statutory costs paid to local law enforcement agencies, the Common School Fund keeps about 8% of a $100,000 forfeiture. This statutory amendment is not consistent with <sup>9</sup> The statute further provides that publicly-paid prosecutors cannot receive a contingency fee for private forfeiture work. § 34-24-1-8(d). Thus, conflicts like those that occurred in the cases that McKinney handled will not reoccur.

Indiana's State Constitution which mandates that these funds be used to fund public education.

Moreover, the contingency fee structure incentivizes private attorneys to bring lots of small cases. Private lawyers have little incentive to bring larger, more complex forfeitures which can be time consuming; their percentages diminishes as the amount of the recovery increases. In contrast, forfeiture of vehicles tend to be straightforward and more profitable under the statute.

Given that the State keeps nearly all of the forfeited assets to fund its law enforcement budgets and given that private lawyers are improperly incentivized to behave like bounty hunters, Amici urge this Court to hold that the Eighth Amendment's Excessive Fines Clause is incorporated into the Fourteenth Amendment.

CONCLUSION

Indiana's unfair and harsh civil forfeiture scheme suffers from systematic problems including due process deficiencies that strip Hoosiers of time-honored rights. Now, more than ever, Hoosiers need relief from these harsh, profit-driven practices and request protection under the Eighth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. Amici urge this Court to speak clearly on the invidious effects of forfeiture and overturn the decision of the Indiana Supreme Court. A clear pronouncement on the incorporation of this important right through the Fourteenth Amendment to be free of excessive punishment will help guide lower courts and the Indiana Legislature.

(e)If, at the end of the time allotted for an answer, there is no answer on file, the court, upon motion, shall enter judgment in favor of the state and shall order the property disposed of in accordance with section 4 [Ind. Code § 34-24-1-4] of this chapter.

34-24-1-4. Burden of proof — Judgment.

(a)At the hearing, the prosecuting attorney must show by a preponderance of the evidence that the property was within the definition of property subject to seizure under section 1 [Ind. Code § 34-24-1-1] of this chapter. If the property seized was a vehicle, the prosecuting attorney must also show by a preponderance of the evidence that a person who has an ownership interest of record in the bureau of motor vehicles knew or had reason to know that the vehicle was being used in the commission of the offense.

(b)If the prosecuting attorney fails to meet the burden of proof, the court shall order the property released to the owner, unless the owner's possession of the property is illegal. If property is released to the owner under this subsection, the owner is not subject to or responsible for any charges for storage of the property or other expenses incurred in the preservation of the property.

Code § 34-24-1-5] of this chapter, shall order distribution of the property in accordance with subsection (d). The court's order may permit the law enforcement agency to use the property for a period not to exceed three (3) years. However, the order must require that, after the period specified by the court, the law enforcement agency shall deliver the property to the county sheriff for public sale.

(1)the property, if it is not money or real property, be sold under section 6 [Ind. Code § 34-24-1-6] of this chapter, by the sheriff of the county in which the property was seized, and if the property is a vehicle, this sale must occur after any period of use specified in subsection (c);

(2)the property, if it is real property, be sold in the same manner as real property is sold on execution under Ind. Code § 34-55-6; and
