JOSEPH LIGON, :
Petitioner

PETITION FOR ALLOWANCE OF APPEAL FROM
THE SUPERIOR TO THE SUPREME COURT

TO THE HONORABLE, THE CHIEF JUSTICE AND JUSTICES OF THE SUPREME COURT:

Eighty-one year old Joseph Ligon, through Bradley S. Bridge, Assistant Defender, Karl Baker, Assistant Defender, Chief, Appeals Division, Keir Bradford-Grey, Defender, and co-counsel, Marsha Levick, Deputy Director, Juvenile Law Center, requests the allowance of an appeal in the captioned matter and respectfully represents:

1. This is a Petition for Allowance of Appeal from the published Superior Court decision of March 28, 2019, in which a panel of that Court upheld the imposition of a mandatory lifetime parole tail sentence imposed upon juvenile lifer Joseph Ligon even though at that point he had been incarcerated for over sixty-six (66) years. The United States Supreme Court in Miller v. Alabama, 567 U.S. 460 (2012) invalidated mandatory life sentences requiring that a juvenile's sentence must be individualized.

As that individualization must apply to the maximum as well as the minimum portion of a sentence, this Court should grant review of this important constitutional question. The Superior Court's Opinion is attached hereto as Exhibit A. The trial judge's opinion is attached hereto as Exhibit B.

2. The question presented by this Petition For Allowance Of Appeal is:

Does Not United States Supreme Court Decision In Miller v. Alabama, 567 U.S. 460 (2012), Which Invalidated Mandatory Life Imprisonment For Juveniles And Required That Juveniles' Sentences Be Individualized, Invalidate Mandatory Lifetime Parole Sentences For Juveniles?

3. The facts giving rise to the instant Petition For Allowance of Appeal:

Joseph Ligon was fifteen years old when he was arrested on February 20, 1953, and charged with two counts of first degree murder; he was found guilty on June 9, 1953 and a mandatory sentence life imprisonment was imposed on December 18, 1953 (N.T. 5/17/17, 15).<sup>1</sup> As a result of the United States Supreme Court decision in Montgomery v. Louisiana, 136 S.Ct. 718 (2016), Mr. Ligon's prior mandatory life sentences were vacated and a new sentencing hearing was held on May 17, 2017. Judge Barbara McDermott vacated Mr. Ligon's prior illegal mandatory life sentences and imposed two concurrent sentences of 35 years to life (N.T. 5/17/17, 43). Mr.

"N.T. 5/17/17" refers to the notes of testimony from the resentencing hearing on May 17, 2017.

Ligon was eighty (80) years old at the time of sentencing and had been in prison for over 64 years (N.T. 5/17/17, 10).

A single issue was presented to the Superior Court on appeal: whether it was constitutional to impose a mandatory lifetime parole tail sentence. As the Superior Court held that mandatory lifetime parole was required based upon its reading of this Court's decisions in Commonwealth v. Batts, 66 A.3d 286 (2013) ("Batts I") and Commonwealth v. Batts, 163 A.3d 410 (2017) ("Batts II"), it affirmed the mandatory lifetime parole sentence imposed on Mr. Ligon.

4. Reasons for granting this Allowance Of Appeal.

The Superior Court maintained that this was an easy case. It asserted that this Court already rejected this issue in Commonwealth v. Batts, 66 A.3d 286, 294-297 (2013) ("Batts I") and Commonwealth v. Batts, 163 A.3d 410, 439-441 (2017) ("Batts II") That is simply incorrect. In Batts I and Batts II the question presented was whether a sentence of life imprisonment was constitutionally imposed. This Court was not presented with the issue here: whether it is unconstitutional to mandate a maximum sentence of lifetime parole. In order to understand why mandatory lifetime parole is unconstitutional and violates both Miller and Montgomery, it is important to examine what this Court's two decisions in Batts decided and, more importantly, what they did not decide.

In Batts I this Court was presented with its first opportunity to assess the impact of Miller on Pennsylvania law that previously had mandated life imprisonment for a juvenile convicted of either first or second degree murder. This Court described the issues before it:

This Court granted allowance of appeal, limited to the questions of whether Roper rendered imposition of a sentence of life imprisonment without the possibility of parole on a juvenile unconstitutional and whether Appellant's Eighth and Fourteenth Amendment rights were violated by the mandatory nature of his sentence. See Commonwealth v. Batts, 603 Pa. 65, 981 A.2d 1283 (2009) (per curiam).

In light of the Supreme Court's opinion in Miller, we directed the parties to submit supplemental briefing and conducted oral argument on two additional issues:

- 1) What is, as a general matter, the appropriate remedy on direct appeal in Pennsylvania for a defendant who was sentenced to a mandatory term of life imprisonment without the possibility of parole for a murder committed when the defendant was under the age of eighteen?
- 2) To what relief, if any, is appellant entitled from the mandatory term of life imprisonment without parole for the murder he committed when he was fourteen years old?

See Commonwealth v. Batts, No. 79 MAP 2009, July 9, 2012 Order (per curiam).

Commonwealth v. Batts I, supra. at 290, 293.

In Commonwealth v. Batts II, this Court described the issues before it:

[Qu'eed Batts'] case returns for the second time on discretionary review for this Court to determine whether the sentencing court imposed an illegal sentence when it resentenced him to life in prison without the possibility of parole. After careful review, we conclude, based on the findings made by the sentencing court and the evidence upon which it relied, that the sentence is illegal in light of Miller v. Alabama, 567 U.S. 460, 132 S.Ct. 2455, 183 L.Ed.2d 407 (2012) (holding that a mandatory sentence of life in prison without the possibility of parole, imposed upon a juvenile without consideration of the defendant's age and the attendant characteristics of youth, is prohibited under the Eighth Amendment to the United States Constitution), and Montgomery v. Louisiana, --- U.S. ---, 136 S.Ct. 718, 193 L.Ed.2d 599 (2016) (holding that the Miller decision announced a new substantive rule of constitutional law that applies retroactively and clarifying the limited circumstances in which a life-without-parole sentence is permissible for a crime committed when the defendant was a juvenile).

Commonwealth v. Batts II, 163 A.3d 410, 415 (Pa. 2017).

In Batts II this Court established certain procedural safeguards to effectuate Miller and Montgomery, e.g., requirement that there be a presumption against a life without parole sentence and that the Commonwealth bears the burden of overcoming that presumption beyond a reasonable doubt. This Court determined that these protections were not in place at Mr. Batts' first resentencing hearing so the matter was remanded yet again for a new resentencing hearing consistent with Batts II.

This Court in Batts I and Batts II did not directly consider the issue presented here: the constitutionality of a lifetime parole tail. There would be no reason to do so because that issue was not before the Court in either case. Rather the issue presented in both cases was the constitutionality of the life without parole sentence imposed on Mr. Batts. To be sure, the Superior Court below quoted language from Batts I that was suggestive of the answer to this question.

[O]nce a sentencing court evaluates the criteria identified in Miller and determines a LWOP sentence is inappropriate, it must impose a “mandatory maximum sentence of life imprisonment as required by Section 1102(a), accompanied by a minimum sentence determined by the common pleas court upon resentencing.”

Commonwealth v. Ligon, slip opinion at 4, quoting Batts I at 297.

The lower court panel did not quote other language in Batts I that suggested a different result:

We recognize, as a policy matter, that Miller’s rationale-emphasizing characteristics attending youth-militates in favor of individualized sentencing for those under the age of eighteen both in terms of minimum and maximum sentences.

Commonwealth v. Batts I, supra. at 296.

The panel also suggested that this Court’s decision Batt II similarly supported the imposition of a mandatory term of life imprisonment. This flowed, the panel concluded, because of this Court’s observation in Batts II that the General Assembly had not passed a statute dealing with pre-Miller defendants thereby suggesting that the General Assembly had agreed with the Batts I’s treatment of pre-Miller defendants<sup>2</sup>.

<sup>2</sup>

The legislature had solely passed a statute after Miller but it dealt solely with post-Miller defendants. See 18 Pa.C.S.A. §1102.1.

Commonwealth v. Ligon, slip opinion at 5-6.

The problem with this analysis is that it never addressed the constitutionality of a mandatory lifetime parole tail because this Court in Batts I and Batts II was never presented with a legal challenge to the lifetime parole tail. It was presented with a challenge to lifetime imprisonment sentences generally and what resentencing procedures were required specifically. To answer this question, this Court determined that the life sentences mandated in 18 Pa.C.S.A. §1102 could be severed by the Parole Board's disempowerment to grant parole to life sentences in 61 Pa.C.S. § 6137(a)(1). This Court concluded that after Miller, the State Parole Board was be empowered to grant parole for juveniles convicted of first or second degree murder following a resentencing as they would not be serving "life imprisonment."

The United States Supreme Court in Graham v. Florida, 560 U.S. 48 (2010) recognized that sentencing juveniles "makes relevant th[e] Court's cases demanding individualized sentencing." Miller, 567 U.S. at 475. The Supreme Court has held mandatory schemes related to the harshest penalties to be flawed if they "gave no significance to the character and record of the individual offender or the circumstances of the offense, and excluded from consideration . . . the possibility of compassionate or mitigating factors." Id. (citations omitted) (quotation marks omitted).

Moreover, the United States Supreme Court in Montgomery v. Louisiana, 136 S. Ct. 718 (2016) held that the imposition of a life without parole sentence only be imposed on children who are “permanently incorrigible”, “irreparably corrupt” or “irretrievably depraved.” That same standard must be applied to mandatory minimum life sentences as well as mandatory maximum lifetime parole tails.

In considering mandatory life without parole in juvenile cases, the Supreme Court in Miller found objectionable that “every juvenile will receive the same sentence as every other [despite age], the shooter and the accomplice, the child from a stable household and the child from a chaotic and abusive one.” Id. at 477. Therefore, a trial court has the obligation to fashion a sentence that appropriately reflects the individual circumstances of each juvenile and the offense. Treating each juvenile the same by imposing a mandatory maximum sentence of life ignores the obligation of the court to fashion a sentence which reflects a careful balance of the Miller factors.

United States District Court Judge Savage recognized this inherent contradiction in Commonwealth v. Songster, 201 F.Supp.3d 639 (E.D.Pa. 2016):

Routinely fixing the maximum of each sentence at life contradicts a sense of proportionality and smacks of categorical uniformity. A sentencing practice that results in every juvenile’s sentence with a maximum term of life, regardless of the minimum term, does not reflect individualized sentencing. Placing the decision with the Parole Board, with its limited resources and lack of sentencing expertise, is not a substitute for a judicially imposed sentence. . . . If the sentencing court finds that the defendant is not corruptible and not incorrigible, it must impose a maximum sentence less than life to reflect that finding. . . . No one can doubt that there are defendants who should be released immediately after a weighing of all the factors. There are those whose rehabilitation will be beyond question. . . . [These individuals], some now graying adults, should not be required to suffer delay and another proceeding before gaining the freedom they already deserve had the sentencing judge conducted a thorough sentencing hearing applying the principles prescribed by Miller and Montgomery.

Songster, 201 F.Supp.3d at 642.

This Court in Commonwealth v. Machicote, ___ A.3d ___ (Pa., April 26, 2019) emphasized yet again the constitutional mandate for individualized sentencing in juvenile lifer resentencing cases.

As iterated throughout this opinion, one of the hallmarks of the line of United States Supreme Court cases pertaining to juvenile sentencing, is the notion that conviction for a specific crime does not warrant the same sentence in all circumstances. The individualized sentence based upon the criteria developed in Miller must be considered in each case.

Commonwealth v. Machicote, slip opinion at 15-16.

In Machicote this Court remanded for resentencing because the resentencing judge did not explicitly consider the Miller factors in imposing sentence though the imposed sentence was not one of life without parole. Similarly here, the resentencing judge never considered and applied the Miller factors to the maximum portion of the imposed sentence because it was a mandatory term of lifetime parole.

In Pennsylvania an individual is not entitled to release on parole. Rather, parole eligibility is a procedure through which an individual can be granted release in exchange for continued supervision on the outside. A mandatory life maximum sentence invariably provides the Parole Board with the ability to effectively impose a life without parole sentence by the denial of parole. A court, though, would not be capable of forcing the Parole Board to release an individual even if the individual has demonstrated consistent rehabilitation. Rather, imposing a mandatory life maximum sentence “reflects an abdication of judicial responsibility” by “[p]assing off the ultimate decision to the Parole Board in every case.” Songster v. Beard, 201 F.Supp.3d 639, 642 (E.D. Pa. 2016). Thus, “[L]ife without parole remains a possibility regardless of the individual’s peculiar situation.” Id.

Even if an individual is granted parole, though, he is still subjected to extensive monitoring that may not be warranted. Such restrictions include the inability to travel outside of their home county without permission, a curfew that impedes complete reentry, and the risk of serving time for minor or technical parole violations that would not otherwise demand incarceration.

A maximum sentence of life assumes that the individual will never be fully rehabilitated despite the overwhelming likelihood that as children become adults they will naturally rehabilitate themselves and desist from further criminal conduct. A lifetime of parole does little to promote rehabilitation and instead risks trapping individuals in minor violations that are not indicative of future crime, but rather more indicative of technical challenges in state supervision. Since the vast majority of individuals can and will be rehabilitated, subjecting all of them to a lifetime of parole makes a judgment contrary to that reality and contrary to the constitution. Mr. Ligon should be able to present to a resentencing judge that there would be no purpose in keeping an octogenarian on parole for the rest of his life, particularly as that judge would have records of how he had conducted himself during the previous sixty-six (66) years of incarceration.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, Joseph Ligon requests that this Honorable Court grant review of his mandatory sentencing of lifetime parole, find that it violated the requirement of individualized sentence, and remand for a new sentencing hearing.

OPINION BY BOWES, J.:

FILED MARCH 28, 2019

Joseph F. Ligon appeals from the May 17, 2017 judgment of sentence of two concurrent terms of thirty-five years to life imprisonment that were imposed after he was resentenced on two 1953 convictions for first-degree murder.<sup>1</sup> We affirm.

The convictions arose out of events that occurred on February 20, 1953, when Appellant was 15 years old. Appellant and four others imbibed wine and, over the course of approximately two hours, proceeded to rob and stab eight people, killing Jackson Hamm and Charles Pitts. When Appellant was arrested that night, he was carrying a knife sheath on his person. A knife was recovered from the patrol car where Appellant had been sitting. Two of <sup>1</sup> This Court does not quash the present appeal, despite Appellant's failure to file separate notices at each docket number, as this appeal was filed prior to the decision in Commonwealth v. Walker, 185 A.3d 969, 971 (Pa. 2018), which applies prospectively.

Appellant's co-defendants gave statements naming Appellant as the actor who stabbed all of the victims.

Appellant pled guilty to two counts of first-degree murder, and on December 18, 1953, the court imposed two concurrent mandatory terms of life imprisonment without the possibility of parole ("LWOP"). After the United States Supreme Court's decisions in Miller v. Alabama, 567 U.S. 460 (2012) and Montgomery v. Louisiana, ___ U.S. ___, 136 S. Ct. 718 (2016), Appellant received a resentencing hearing wherein he was ordered to serve two concurrent sentences of thirty-five years to life imprisonment. At the time of the resentencing, Appellant was eighty years old, having served over sixty-four years in prison. Credit for time served rendered Appellant immediately eligible for parole. Appellant filed post-sentence motions which were denied. He filed a timely notice of appeal and complied with the sentencing court's order directing him to file a concise statement of errors complained of on appeal pursuant to Pa.R.A.P. 1925(b). The resentencing court filed its opinion, and the matter is ripe for our review.

Appellant raises the following issue on appeal: "Is it unconstitutional to impose a mandatory lifetime parole tail on all juvenile lifers being resentenced?" Appellant's brief at 3. When reviewing challenges to the legality of a sentence, our standard of review is de novo and our scope of review is plenary. Commonwealth v. Brown, 159 A.3d 531, 532 (Pa.Super. 2017) (citation omitted).

Appellant argues that the trial court's imposition of a mandatory life maximum sentence violates the Miller and Montgomery holdings, which invalidated the sentencing scheme that existed for juveniles convicted of first-degree murder prior to June 25, 2012, and require individualized sentences for juveniles. The Commonwealth agrees.

We first address Appellant's argument that Miller and Montgomery invalidated the applicable sentencing statutes, making his mandatory maximum sentence of life imprisonment illegal. At the time of Appellant's conviction, the then-applicable sentencing statute required that a person convicted of first degree murder receive a sentence of LWOP or the death penalty.<sup>2</sup> In Miller, the United States Supreme Court found that the imposition of a mandatory LWOP sentence, imposed upon a juvenile without consideration of the defendant's age and "the attendant characteristics of youth," violated the Eighth Amendment to the United States Constitution. The Supreme Court later declared Miller to be retroactive, requiring states to extend parole eligibility to juvenile offenders who committed their crimes pre-Miller. Montgomery, supra at 736.

<sup>2</sup> Appellant was originally sentenced under 18 P.S. § 4701, which was repealed and replaced by 18 Pa.C.S. § 1102 in 1972, after § 4701 was found to be unconstitutional on grounds unrelated to Appellant's conviction. Commonwealth v. Bradley, 295 A.2d 842 (Pa. 1972) (citing Furman v. Georgia, 408 U.S. 238 (1972)). Section 1102(a) required that a person convicted of first-degree murder receive a sentence of life or death. The parole code provided that a person sentenced to a term of life was not eligible for parole. 61 Pa.C.S. § 6137(a)(1).

The Pennsylvania Supreme Court interpreted Miller and found that, pursuant to Commonwealth v. Batts, 66 A.3d 286, 297 (Pa. 2013) (Batts I), once a sentencing court evaluates the criteria identified in Miller and determines a LWOP sentence is inappropriate, it must impose a "mandatory maximum sentence of life imprisonment as required by Section 1102(a), accompanied by a minimum sentence determined by the common pleas court upon resentencing." Our Supreme Court explained that § 1102 was still valid, since the unconstitutional part of Pennsylvania's sentencing scheme, the lack of parole eligibility pursuant to § 6137(a)(1), was severable. The Batts I court reasoned,

Miller neither barred imposition of a [LWOP] sentence on a juvenile categorically nor indicated that a life sentence with the possibility of parole could never be mandatorily imposed on a juvenile. Rather, Miller requires only that there be judicial consideration of the appropriate age-related factors set forth in that decision prior to the imposition of a sentence of [LWOP] on a juvenile.

Batts I, supra at 295-96.

The interplay between § 1102(a) and § 6137(a)(1) was further examined by our Court in Commonwealth v. Sesky, 170 A.3d 1105 (Pa.Super. 2017). In Sesky, the defendant, like Appellant, was convicted of first-degree murder prior to June 25, 2012. However, Sesky was resentenced, after Montgomery, to thirteen to twenty-six years of imprisonment, instead of the mandatory maximum lifetime tail which Appellant received. The Commonwealth appealed, challenging the term-of-years tail, and argued that the court should have imposed a mandatory maximum life sentence pursuant to § 1102(a)(1). Seskey, like Appellant, argued that Miller invalidated the entire sentencing scheme, so that the trial court was not required to impose any minimum or maximum term of imprisonment. Our Court agreed with the Commonwealth and vacated the judgment of sentence, and remanded for imposition of a sentence which included a mandatory maximum term of life imprisonment.

In reaching its conclusion, our Court relied on our Supreme Court's holding in Commonwealth v. Batts, 163 A.3d 410 (Pa. 2017) (Batts II), wherein the Court reaffirmed its Batts I holding, and again stated that the trial court must resentence defendants to either LWOP or a maximum term of life imprisonment as required by § 1102(a). Seskey, supra at 1109. In doing so, our Court reiterated Batts II's interpretation of the interplay between § 1102(a) and § 6137(a)(1):

Despite the passage of four years since we issued our decision in Batts I, the General Assembly has not passed a statute addressing the sentencing of juveniles convicted of first-degree murder pre-Miller<sup>[3]</sup>, nor has it amended the pertinent provisions that were severed in Batts I. As we have previously stated, the General Assembly is quite able to address what it believes is a judicial misinterpretation of a statute, and its failure to do so in

<sup>3</sup> The legislature eventually responded to Miller by enacting 18 Pa.C.S. § 1102.1, which provides that individuals between the ages of fifteen and seventeen convicted of first-degree murder must be sentenced to a maximum of life imprisonment and a minimum term set anywhere from thirty-five years to life. However, this statute only applies to those individuals sentenced after June 24, 2012.

the years following the Batts I decision gives rise to the presumption that the General Assembly is in agreement with our interpretation.

Seskey, supra at 1109, (citing Batts II, supra at 445) (internal quotation marks, citations, and footnote omitted).

Based on a review of the above-precedent and statutory authority, it is clear that Appellant's argument that "there is no relevant statute or appellate case law requiring the imposition of a lifetime parole tail," is incorrect. Appellant's brief at 10. Under Batts II and Seskey, the resentencing court was statutorily required to sentence Appellant to a maximum term of life imprisonment.

Appellant's second argument is that the imposition of a mandatory life tail is incompatible with Miller's individualized sentencing requirement because the parole board could choose to deny a rehabilitated inmate parole indefinitely. Appellant relies on Songster v. Beard, 201 F.Supp.3d 639 (E.D.Pa. 2016), to support his position that placing the authority to determine an individual's eligibility for release in the State Parole Board would be an abdication of the judicial responsibility of individualized sentencing mandated by Miller.

Importantly, the Songster decision has no precedential value in Pennsylvania. Commonwealth v. Lambert, 765 A.2d 306, 354-55 (Pa. 2000). Moreover, our Court has previously considered the argument that Appellant makes with Songster and found it to be "unavailing," as it does not address Graham v. Florida, 560 U.S. 48, 75 (2010), a case which held that parole boards may make the ultimate determination whether an individual has demonstrated the requisite maturity and rehabilitation to deserve release. See Commonwealth v. Olds, 192 A.3d 1188, 1197 n.18 (Pa.Super. 2018). This lapse is especially concerning, as Appellant cites to Graham multiple times in his brief in support of his arguments, yet completely fails to address that his position is contrary to Graham's ultimate holding.

Further, Appellant's intimation that the Pennsylvania Board of Parole cannot be trusted to do its job in a fair and equitable fashion is without support in either Miller or Montgomery. The Miller Court did not call into question the ability of state parole boards to make the decision as to whether a juvenile murderer should be paroled and did not equate a sentence of LWOP with one for life with the possibility of parole. Montgomery, supra at 736. In fact, it did the opposite, merely requiring the states to make the relevant inmates parole eligible, thereby insuring that those prisoners who have shown the ability to reform will receive a meaningful opportunity for release. It did not hold that life sentences with parole eligibility are unconstitutional, or that juvenile murderers must be released at some point regardless of their fitness to rejoin society. Thus, a sentence with a term of years minimum and a maximum sentence of life does not violate Miller's individualized sentencing requirement, because it properly leaves the ultimate decision of when a defendant will be released to the parole board.

Appellant also fails to account for the fact that, if we adopt his argument, and allow him and others similarly-situated to receive a term-of-years maximum sentence, such a holding would lead to impermissibly disparate results. Section 1102.1 provides a clear expression of legislative intent as to juveniles that are convicted of first-degree murder post-Miller. Although, the statute itself does not apply to Appellant based upon the date of his conviction, it does apply to all similarly-situated defendants who were sentenced after its enactment. Mindful of the difference in treatment accorded to those subject to non-final judgments of sentence for murder as of Miller's issuance, and the enactment of § 1102.1, our Supreme Court has ordered trial courts to resentence juveniles to a maximum term of life imprisonment. Batts II, supra. We are bound to follow its mandate.

Appellant has received two concurrent sentences of thirty-five years to life, which rendered him immediately eligible for parole due to his sixty-four years of time credit. He has received the full benefit of Miller and its progeny.

Judgment of sentence affirmed.

McDermott, J.

July 11, 2017

Procedural History

On February 20, 1953, the Defendant, Joseph Ligon, age fifteen, was arrested and charged with Murder and related offenses. That same year, the Defendant was convicted of two counts of First-Degree Murder, in which he received concurrent life imprisonment terms without the possibility of parole.

In 2016, a three-judge en banc panel was established to decide all questions of law concerning the resentencing of juveniles previously sentenced to life without parole.<sup>1</sup> On October 28, 2016, the en banc panel was presented with fifteen questions of law, in which Joseph Ligon was a named defendant. On April 13, 2017, the en banc panel issued its opinion addressing each question of law.<sup>2</sup>

On May 5, 2017, this Court received multiple pro se letters from the Defendant containing several ambiguous requests, including a request to continue his resentencing. Just prior to this Court receiving these letters, defense counsel also indicated to this Court that he wished to continue the resentencing while he appealed the en banc panel's decision. On May 8, 2017, this Court held a status hearing to address the Defendant's letters and any continuance requests. On that date, after a lengthy on-the-record conversation with the Defendant, this Court denied the continuance request and explained to the Defendant that his resentencing would proceed as scheduled.

<sup>1</sup> In 2016, the First Judicial District of Pennsylvania, Court of Common Pleas, adopted "General Court Regulation No. 1 of 2016." The Regulation established procedures for juvenile lifers previously sentenced to life without parole to have an opportunity to show that their crimes did not reflect irreparable corruption and that they should be considered for release on parole. For further discussion on what necessitated the regulation, see Miller v. Alabama, 132 S.Ct. 2455 (2012) and Montgomery v. Louisiana, 136 S. Ct. 718 (2016).

On May 10, 2017, the Defendant filed a "Motion for this Court to Certify Six Questions [of Law] for Interlocutory Appeal." On May 12, 2017, the Commonwealth filed a response. On May 15, 2017, the Defendant filed with the Superior Court an "Emergency Application for Stay of Sentencing Currently Set for May 17, 2017 so that [Superior] Court May Consider a Petition for Interlocutory Appeal Filed May 15, 2017." On May 16, 2017, the en banc panel denied the Defendant's Motion to Certify Six Questions of Law for Interlocutory Appeal. On the same date, the Superior Court denied his Emergency Application to stay his sentencing.

On May 17, 2017, this Court vacated the Defendant's life sentences, and resentenced him to concurrent terms of thirty-five years to life for First-Degree Murder, with credit for time served, and eligibility for parole. On May 29, 2017, the Defendant filed a Motion for Modification of Sentence, which this Court denied on June 2, 2017.

On June 5, 2017, the Defendant filed a Notice of Appeal. On June 22, 2017, the Defendant filed a timely Rule 1925(b) Statement of Matters Complained on Appeal.

Discussion

The Defendant raises two issues on appeal: that this Court illegally resentenced the Defendant to a maximum term of lifetime parole; and that the Defendant's sentence was illegal as there was no other lawful sentence to receive other than a sentence for third-degree murder, which carries a maximum sentence of twenty to forty years.

These issues are without merit as they have been thoroughly resolved in Commonwealth v. Batts, --- A.3d --- 2017 WL 2735411 (June 26, 2017). In Batts, the Court found that for juveniles convicted prior to Miller, a court may resentence affected defendants to a minimum term-of-years sentence and a maximum sentence of life in prison, exposing defendants to parole eligibility upon the expiration of their minimum sentences. Id.; see also 61 Pa.C.S. § 6137(a)(3). In the same opinion, the Supreme Court also conclusively found “no support for the proposition that juveniles convicted of first-degree murder pre-Miller [v. Alabama] should be sentenced as though they were convicted of third-degree murder.” See Batts, supra.<sup>3</sup>

Because these issues have been fully resolved by our Supreme Court, the Defendant’s judgment of sentence should be affirmed.

BY THE COURT,

En Banc Panel Decision

I. Procedural History

On June 25, 2012, the United States Supreme Court issued its landmark decision in Miller v. Alabama, in which it held that “the Eighth Amendment forbids a sentencing scheme that mandates life in prison without possibility of parole for juvenile offenders.” 132 S. Ct. 2455, 2469 (2012) (internal citation omitted). Though the Court did not preclude a sentencing court from sentencing a juvenile to life without parole, the Court did require the sentencing court to “take into account how children are different, and how those differences counsel against irrevocably sentencing them to a lifetime in prison.” Id. at 2469. However, the Court did not address the question of whether the holding in Miller would apply retroactively to inmates who had committed murder as juveniles and were already serving life sentences without the possibility of parole. In response, on October 25, 2012, the Governor of this Commonwealth signed into law a new sentencing scheme, 18 Pa.C.S.A. § 1102.1(a)(2), for persons under 18 years of age, convicted of murder. Specifically, the statute provided:

CP-51-CR-0311332-1953 Comm v Ligon, Joseph F

[A] juvenile offender under the age of fifteen years at the time of the offense may receive “a term of life imprisonment without parole, or a term of imprisonment, the minimum of which shall be at least 25 years to life.” An offender at least fifteen but under the age of eighteen years, may receive, “a term of life imprisonment without parole, or a term of imprisonment, the minimum of which shall be at least 35 years to life. The statute then lists multiple individualized factors that the court should consider in making its determination, including, but not limited to: the nature and circumstances of the offense; the defendant’s age, mental capacity, maturity, culpability, and degree of criminal sophistication; and the success or failure of any prior rehabilitative attempts.

Commonwealth v. Batts, 66 A.3d 286, 300 (Pa. 2013) (M. Baer, concurring) (citations omitted) (Batts I). In addition, the legislature stated that the new sentencing scheme applied only to juveniles convicted of murder on and after the date Miller was issued (June 25, 2012). Id.

Subsequently, on January 25, 2016, the Supreme Court decided Montgomery v. Louisiana, 136 S. Ct. 718 (2016). The Court held that Miller announced a substantive rule of constitutional law and, therefore, applies retroactively to juvenile offenders already serving mandatory life without parole sentences. Id. The Court ruled that such offenders “must be given the opportunity to show their crime did not reflect irreparable corruption; and if it did not, their hope for some years of life outside prison walls must be restored.” Id. at 736. The Court also stated:

Giving Miller retroactive effect, moreover, does not require States to relitigate sentences, let alone convictions, in every case where a juvenile offender received mandatory life without parole. A State may remedy a Miller violation by permitting juvenile homicide offenders to be considered for parole, rather than by resentencing them. Allowing those offenders to be considered for parole ensures that juveniles whose crimes reflected only transient immaturity—and who have since matured—will not be forced to serve a disproportionate sentence in violation of the Eighth Amendment.

Montgomery v. Louisiana, 136 S. Ct. at 736, as revised (Jan. 27, 2016) (internal citations omitted).

The Court of Common Pleas of Philadelphia adopted General Court Regulation No. 1 (“GCR No. 1”) of 2016, which established the procedure to be used to provide Juvenile Lifers Sentenced Without the Possibility of Parole (“JLSWOP”) the opportunity to show that their crimes did not reflect irreparable corruption and that they should be considered for release on parole. The regulation noted:

Moreover, in light of the fact that cases eligible for this [JLSWOP] Program span decades and involved numerous trial judges who have retired, have been reassigned, and are otherwise unavailable, extraordinary circumstances exist which, in accordance with Pa. R. Crim. P. 700 (A), justify the assignment of these cases as provided herein, to enable the Court to efficiently and expeditiously dispose of these cases.

GCR No. 1. In addition, the regulation established an en banc three judge panel (“the panel”) of Common Pleas Judges to hear and decide all JLSWOP questions of law. “Decisions rendered by the en banc panel shall be binding on all trial courts of the First Judicial District and as such shall be considered the law of the case.” Id.

On October 28, 2016, the following Questions of Law were filed by the above-named Defendants:<sup>1</sup>

1. Whether it is unconstitutional to ever impose a maximum sentence of life imprisonment for an offense committed by a person who was under 18 years of age at the time of the offense or whether such a maximum sentence of life may be imposed mandatorily, under Graham v. Florida, Miller v. Alabama, Montgomery v. Louisiana, Commonwealth v. Batts, and Songster v. Beard.

2. Whether this court may constitutionally impose any sentence other than a sentence for third-degree murder, which is the only statutorily lawful sentence in Pennsylvania in a case of first-degree murder committed by a person under 18 years of age or, for such persons convicted of second-degree murder, a sentence for third-degree murder or for the felony associated with the second-degree murder conviction following Miller.
3. Whether since 18 Pa. C.S.A. § 1102.1 explicitly does not apply retroactively to those convicted on or before June 24, 2012, the court may use §1102.1 as a guide for re-sentencing or whether instead each defendant must be afforded an individualized sentencing hearing with the judge having complete discretion to set a minimum sentence.
4. Whether there is a presumption against reimposition of a life without parole sentence at resentencing under Miller v. Alabama and Montgomery v. Louisiana, establishing that such sentences should be rare and uncommon, and further whether these cases also establish a presumption of immaturity and reduced culpability.
5. Whether the Commonwealth must establish beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant's crime reflects permanent incorrigibility, irreparable corruption or irretrievable depravity before such defendant may receive a sentence of life without parole.
6. Whether the defendant has a right to have a jury determine if he or she is permanently incorrigible, irreparably corrupt or irretrievably depraved prior to the imposition of a sentence of life without parole.
7. Whether expert testimony is required to establish that the defendant's crime reflects permanent incorrigibility, irreparable corruption or irretrievable depravity.
8. Whether Pa.R.Crim.P. Rule 573 governs the disclosure of any expert testimony.
9. Whether, in accordance with Graham, Miller, and Montgomery, affording defendants a "meaningful opportunity" for release if life is not imposed means release before defendant reaches, or is approaching, his/her life expectancy, and whether de facto life sentences are constitutionally barred.
10. Whether there are constitutional limits on victim impact testimony.
11. Whether the Court must provide funds to the defendant for a mitigator sufficiently before the time of sentencing so that counsel can adequately and effectively prepare his or her client at sentencing.
12. Whether the Court must provide funds to the defendant for expert witnesses to assist the defense sufficiently before the time of sentencing so that counsel can adequately and effectively prepare his or her client at sentencing.
13. Whether, if the Commonwealth is seeking imposition of life without parole, the Commonwealth must provide notice of such intent at the conclusion of the JLSWOP status hearing at which the date for resentencing is set, and whether such notice must set forth the specific basis for concluding that the defendant is permanently incorrigible, irreparably corrupt or irretrievably depraved.
14. Whether the parties must disclose thirty days prior to the resentencing hearing any evidence or witnesses the parties intend to introduce at sentencing, and whether, in the event of any challenge to the admissibility of such evidence, a judge other than the sentencing judge shall be assigned to rule on the challenge.
15. Whether Dawson v. Delaware 503 U.S. 159, 112 S.Ct 1093 (1992), governs the admissibility at the resentencing hearing of any evidence of gang membership.

On November 28, 2016, the Commonwealth submitted its Questions of Law in which it raised the following question:

1. The Commonwealth concedes and stipulates for purposes of resentencing that the instant defendants are not “permanently incorrigible, irreparably corrupt or irretrievably depraved.” The issue is whether each defendant has standing to litigate defense issues 1, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9 and 13.

Defendants and the Commonwealth submitted Briefs in Support of their Questions of Law on January 6, 2017, and Reply Briefs on February 10, 2017. Oral arguments were scheduled and held March 6, 2017. This panel’s decision followed. Before addressing the instant Questions of Law, this panel first notes that it was created specifically: (1) to consider questions of law that may apply to a substantial number of juvenile lifer cases pending before the court; (2) to the extent possible, the court will provide guidance to the bar of the First Judicial District’s (FJD) interpretation of current applicable law and controlling precedent; and (3) to enable judges of the FJD to render consistent decisions on questions of law that may apply to a substantial number of juvenile lifer cases pending before the court.

Therefore, notwithstanding the Commonwealth’s argument that the Defendants lack standing to litigate questions 1, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9 and 13, this Court will address those questions that may apply to a substantial number of juvenile lifer cases pending before the court and may also provide guidance to the bar. However, we recognize that some of the questions raised by these Defendants will need to be resolved on a case-by-case basis. Accordingly, this panel decides that the positions advanced by the Defendants in Questions 1 through 12, and 14 through 15 are without merit; and agrees that the Defendants’ Question 13 has merit, for the reasons set forth below.

II. Discussion

1. Whether it is unconstitutional to ever impose a maximum sentence of life imprisonment for an offense committed by a person who was under 18 years of age at the time of the offense or whether such a maximum sentence of life may be imposed mandatorily, under Graham v. Florida,<sup>2</sup> Miller v. Alabama,<sup>3</sup> Montgomery v. Louisiana,<sup>4</sup> Commonwealth v. Batts,<sup>5</sup> and Songster v. Beard.<sup>6</sup>

The panel notes that Defendants' Brief states this question differently than in the original Questions of Law. (See Defendants' Brief at 3 "Imposition of a maximum sentence of life imprisonment for an offense committed by a person who was under 18 years of age at the time of the offense is unconstitutional under Graham (2010), Miller (2012), Montgomery (2016), Batts I (2013), Garnett v. Wetzel (2016), Songster v. Beard, (2016)").<sup>7</sup> This panel does not find that this was the holding of the aforementioned cases.

In addition, the Commonwealth asserts that because it is not seeking life without possibility of parole for the above-named defendants and has stipulated that the defendants are not "permanently incorrigible, irreparably corrupt, or irretrievably depraved," the Defendants lack standing. As previously stated, the panel's purpose is to consider questions of law that may apply to a substantial number of juvenile lifer cases pending before the court. To the extent that the instant Defendants lack standing to raise this question of law, its resolution may possibly apply to a substantial number of juvenile lifer cases pending before the court. There are more than 300 juvenile lifer cases pending in Philadelphia. Therefore, awaiting the Commonwealth's decision as to whether to seek life without of parole is not a reason to delay answering this question. This question will be of interest in all cases where the Commonwealth chooses to pursue life without parole. For that reason, it is necessary and appropriate for the panel to answer this question.

<sup>7</sup> Songster v. Beard is not controlling precedent for this Court. However, that court also did not hold that the imposition of a maximum sentence life imprisonment for an offense committed by a person who was under 18 years of age at the time of the crime was unconstitutional.

Defendants assert that it is unconstitutional to impose a sentence of life imprisonment for an offense committed by a person who was under age 18 at the time of the offense. In support of their position the Defendants cite the following: "Pennsylvania Supreme Court specifically held that Miller's requirement of proportionality applied to both the minimum and maximum sentences." Defendants' Brief at 3. The Defendants go on to quote Batts I where it states "We recognize, as a policy matter that Miller's rationale—emphasizing characteristics attending youth—militates in favor of individualized sentencing for those under the age of eighteen both in terms of minimum and maximum sentences." 66 A.3d at 296. However, this was not the holding of Batts I. The next sentences in the paragraph, which the Defendants neglected to include, are dispositive.

In terms of the actual constitutional command, however, Miller's binding holding is specifically couched more narrowly. ("We ... hold that the Eighth Amendment forbids a sentencing scheme that mandates life in prison without possibility of parole for juvenile offenders.") (emphasis added). The High Court thus left unanswered the question of whether a life sentence with the possibility of parole offends the evolving standards it is discerning. Significantly, in the arena of evolving federal constitutional standards, we have expressed a reluctance to "go further than what is affirmatively commanded by the High Court" without "a common law history or a policy directive from our Legislature." ... Moreover, barring application of the entire statutory scheme as applied to juveniles convicted of first-degree murder, based solely on the policy discussion in Miller (short of its affirmative holding), would contradict the "strong presumption that legislative enactments do not violate the constitution." (presumption that the General Assembly does not intend to violate the federal or state constitutions when it enacts legislation).

Id. (internal citations omitted). The Court's argument suggests a hesitation by the Pennsylvania Supreme Court to go beyond the narrow holding of Miller, i.e., merely that the Eighth Amendment forbids a sentencing scheme that mandates a sentence of life in prison without the possibility of parole for juvenile offenders. Miller, 132 S.Ct. at 2469.

Further, the Court in Miller did not preclude the possibility that a juvenile could be sentenced to a maximum sentence of life. "Our decision does not categorically bar a penalty for a class of offenders or type of crime—as, for example, we did in Roper or Graham. Instead, it mandates only that a sentence follow a certain process—considering an offender's youth and attendant characteristics before imposing a particular penalty. Id. at 2471. This statement also indicates that the Court sees a distinction between juveniles punished under Miller and juveniles punished under Roper or Graham; and does not bar a possible life sentence. It merely requires that the sentence follow a process that now considers the offender's youth "before imposing a particular penalty." Id.; see also Montgomery, 136 S.Ct. at 743 (The Court states "[t]hose prisoners who have shown an inability to reform will continue to serve life sentences"). Thus, the Pennsylvania and U.S. Supreme Courts refrained from precluding states from sentencing juvenile offenders to life sentences when warranted. However, such a sentence will be imposed only in the rarest cases. As our Supreme Court has stated above, evolving standards may result in a different resolution in the future, but that is not the law as it stands today.

En Banc Answer: Graham, Miller, Montgomery, and Batts I, do not hold that it is unconstitutional to ever impose a maximum sentence of life imprisonment for an offense committed by a person under 18 at the time of the offense, nor that such a maximum sentence of life may not be imposed mandatorily.

2. Whether this Court may constitutionally impose any sentence other than a sentence for third-degree murder, which is the only statutorily lawful sentence in Pennsylvania in a case of first-degree murder committed by a person 18, for such persons convicted of second-degree murder, a sentence for third-degree murder or for the felony associated with the second-degree murder conviction following Miller.

We note that the Supreme Court's intention in Montgomery was not to disturb the finality of state convictions. See Montgomery 136 S.Ct. at 736 ("Extending parole eligibility to juvenile offenders does not impose an onerous burden on the States, nor does it disturb the finality of state convictions"). The Defendants' convictions for first and second-degree murder are final and resentencing does not require litigation of their convictions.

Defendants assert: (1) that Miller invalidated the only existing sentencing scheme in Pennsylvania for juveniles convicted of first or second-degree murder prior to 2012, and (2) that applying severance principles does not result in a valid legislatively enacted penalty for these Defendants, except for the sentencing scheme for lesser included offenses. This issue was addressed by the Pennsylvania Supreme Court in Batts I where the Appellants argued:

Substantively, Appellant asserts that the statutory scheme providing for a mandatory sentence of life-without-parole upon conviction of first-degree murder is unconstitutional in its entirety in light of Miller. Hence, Appellant contends that this Court should look to other statutes existing at the time that the offense was committed in order to determine the appropriate sentence that may be imposed consistent with the Eighth Amendment. This existing constitutional sentence, Appellant argues, should be based on the most severe lesser included offense, namely, third-degree murder, with a maximum term of forty years' imprisonment.

Batts, 66 A.3d at 294 (internal citations omitted). The Pennsylvania Supreme Court rejected Appellant's assertion that Miller invalidated Section 1102. The Court stated:

Appellant's argument that the entire statutory sentencing scheme for first-degree murder has been rendered unconstitutional as applied to juvenile offenders is not buttressed by either the language of the relevant statutory provisions or the holding in Miller. Section 1102, which mandates the imposition of a life sentence upon conviction for first-degree murder, see 18 Pa.C.S. § 1102(a), does not itself contradict Miller; it is only when that mandate becomes a sentence of life-without-parole as applied to a juvenile offender—which occurs as a result of the interaction between Section 1102, the Parole Code, see 61 Pa.C.S. § 6137(a) (1), and the Juvenile Act, see 42 Pa.C.S. § 6302—that Miller's proscription squarely is triggered. Miller neither barred imposition of a life-without-parole sentence on a juvenile categorically nor indicated that a life sentence with the possibility of parole could never be mandatorily imposed on a juvenile. Rather, Miller requires only that there be judicial consideration of the appropriate age-related factors set forth in that decision prior to the imposition of a sentence of life imprisonment without the possibility of parole on a juvenile.

Id. at 296. In the instant brief, Defendants also contends that “to the extent that part of discussion in Batts I may appear to be contrary, that case has been overruled by Wolfe and Hopkins.” Defendants’ Brief at 6. The Defendants cites Commonwealth v. Wolfe<sup>8</sup> and Commonwealth v. Hopkins<sup>9</sup> for the proposition that “when the statute at issue is unconstitutional, and if the unconstitutional portions cannot be severed in accordance with the Statutory Construction Act, the Court cannot create a substitute provision but must simply strike the invalid law and leave it to the legislature to provide a replacement or a correction.” Defendants’ Brief at 5. This panel disagrees with the proposition that the unconstitutional portions of the relevant statute cannot be severed. According to Hopkins:

Generally speaking, “unless otherwise specified the individual provisions of all statutes are presumptively severable.” Section 1925 provides that the provisions of a statute shall be severable, but that this presumption is rebutted when either (1) the valid provisions of the statute are so essentially and inseparably connected with the void provisions that it cannot be presumed the legislature would have enacted the remaining valid provisions without the voided ones; or (2) the remaining valid provisions standing alone are incomplete and incapable of being executed in accord with the intent of the General Assembly.

Id. at 257, (internal citations omitted) (emphasis added). Based on Miller and Montgomery, the invalid portion of the original statute was the provision mandating a life sentence without the possibility of parole. See 18 Pa.C.S.A. § 1102(a)(1) (providing “a person who has been convicted of a murder of the first-degree ... shall be sentenced to death or a term of life imprisonment ... [ ]”), superseded, relative to juvenile offenders, by 18 Pa.C.S.A. § 1102.1; 61 Pa.C.S.A. § 6137(a)(1) (stating that the Board of Probation and Parole cannot release on parole any inmate serving life imprisonment) as cited in Commonwealth v. Batts, 125 A.3d 33, 36 (Pa. Super. 2015) (Batts II). Such a provision would not be so essential or inseparably connected to the valid provision of the statute that it cannot be presumed the legislature would have enacted the valid provisions without the voided one. Evidence of this fact can be found in the current version 18 Pa.C.S.A. § 1102.1, where the only legislative change was to remove the “death or a term of life imprisonment” and replaced it with a minimum and maximum sentence range. Moreover, the remaining provisions standing alone are not incomplete nor are they incapable of being executed in accord with the intent of the legislature.

Wolfe and Hopkins can be distinguished from Batts I. In Batts I, the Court held that the statute could be severed. Batts, 66 3.Ad at 295–96. In Wolfe and Hopkins the Court found the unconstitutional provisions could not be severed. In Wolfe, the Court held “Unconstitutional terms of statute requiring imposition of ten-year minimum sentence for involuntary deviate sexual intercourse (IDSI), which specifically stated that its provisions were not an element of the crime and that factual matters were to be resolved by sentencing court by preponderance of evidence, could not be severed from remainder of statute,” 140 A.3d at 661.

In Hopkins, the Court found that the provision of a statute requiring imposition of mandatory minimum sentence if certain controlled substance crimes occurred within 1,000 feet of, inter alia, a school was unconstitutional under Alleyn v. United States, 133 S.Ct. 2151 (2013), which held that, under the Sixth Amendment, a jury must find beyond a reasonable doubt any facts that increase a mandatory minimum sentence, and the General Assembly was clear that the mandatory minimum sentencing provisions were not intended to constitute an element of a crime. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 6; 18 Pa.C.S.A. § 6317.

The statutes in the Wolfe and Hopkins were not severable, unlike in Batts I where the Pennsylvania Supreme Court found 18 Pa.C.S.A. § 1102, is severable. Accordingly, this panel finds, that the entire sentencing scheme has not been invalidated.

En Banc Answer: According to our Supreme Court in Batts I the unconstitutional provision of the sentencing scheme can be severed. Therefore third-degree murder is not the only statutorily lawful sentence in Pennsylvania for such persons under 18, convicted of first or second-degree murder following Miller.

3. Whether since 18 Pa. C.S.A. § 1102.1 explicitly does not apply retroactively to those convicted on or before June 24, 2012, the Court may use §1102.1 as a guide for re-sentencing or whether instead each defendant must be afforded an individualized sentencing hearing with the judge having complete discretion to set a minimum sentence.

We agree with the Defendants that 18 Pa. C.S.A. § 1102.1 is not binding on this court for purposes of resentencing. However, that does not preclude our courts from using it as a guide for resentencing. It should first be noted that the Defendants do not include any citations to support the proposition that the Court may not use a valid statute as guidance for resentencing. The Defendants also cite Songster v. Beard, 201 F.Supp.3d 639 (ED. Pa., 2016), appeal dismissed (Oct. 26, 2016), and Garnett v. Wetzel, __ F.Supp.3d __, 2016 WL 4379244 at *1 (ED. Pa., 2016), for the proposition that “[i]f this Court rejects defendants’ argument that Third-Degree Murder is the appropriate lesser included offense for resentencing purposes, no statutory provisions control resentencing. The Court would then be left with no alternative other than to impose a flat sentence of time served." Defendants' Brief at 8. This does not accurately reflect the court's statement in either case. In both cases, the court said "If parole is unavailable, the resentencing court's only option may be a flat sentence imposed after conducting a constitutionally mandated sentencing hearing." Songster, 201 F.Supp.3d at 643; Garnett, 2016 WL 4379244 at *4 (emphasis added). The court went on to add, in both cases, "It is not our role to interpret Pennsylvania law in these circumstances. We do not attempt to usurp the authority of the state court to impose the sentence it deems appropriate so long as it adheres to the constitutionally mandated requirements as set forth in Miller and Montgomery." Songster, 201 F.Supp.3d at 643; Garnett, 2016 WL 4379244 at *4.

Moreover, in his concurring opinion in Batts I, Justice Baer noted:

I write separately to note my belief that, for purposes of uniformity in sentencing, it would be appropriate for trial courts engaging in the task of resentencing under this circumstance to seek guidance in determining a defendant's sentence and setting a minimum term from the General Assembly's timely recent enactment in response to the U.S. Supreme Court's decision in Miller.

Batts, 66 A.3d at 300 (M. Baer, concurring). In addition, pursuant to 42 §9721(b) "[t]he court shall also consider any guidelines for sentencing and resentencing adopted by the Pennsylvania Commission on Sentencing." 42 Pa.C.S.A. § 9721. This suggests that the legislature intended for the sentencing judge to have broad access to statutory guidance in reaching a decision on sentencing.

En Banc Answer: The fact that 18 Pa. C.S.A. § 1102.1 explicitly does not apply retroactively to those convicted on or before June 24, 2012, does not preclude the Court from using §1102.1 as a guide for re-sentencing as it considers the factors set forth in Miller.

4. Whether there is a presumption against reimposition of a life without parole sentence at resentencing under Miller v. Alabama and Montgomery v. Louisiana, establishing that such sentences should be rare and uncommon, and further whether these cases also establish a presumption of immaturity and reduced culpability.

Defendants point to specific language in Miller and Montgomery for the proposition that those cases have created a presumption against a sentence of life without possibility of parole. For example, Defendants' brief states:

The Court declared in Miller that "given all we have said in Roper, Graham and [Miller] about children's diminished culpability and heightened capacity for change, we think appropriate occasions for sentencing juveniles to this harshest possible penalty will be rare and uncommon." Miller, 132 S. Ct. at 2469 (emphasis added)...Miller further noted that the "juvenile offender whose crime reflects irreparable corruption" will be rare and uncommon." Miller, 132 S. Ct. at 2469 (quoting Roper, 543 U.S. at 573; Graham, 560 U.S. at 68.

Defendants' Brief at 9. We agree that the Court in Miller and Montgomery anticipates that a sentence of life without parole will be "rare" and "uncommon." However, the Court did not take the additional step of creating a presumption against such a sentence. Therefore this Court does not find such a presumption. In fact, in holding that "the Eighth Amendment forbids a sentencing scheme that mandates life in prison without possibility of parole for juvenile offenders," the Court explicitly stated that it did not intend to create a categorical bar on life without parole for juveniles. See Miller, 132 S.Ct. at 2469 ("Because that holding is sufficient to decide these cases, we do not consider [petitioners'] alternative argument that the Eighth Amendment requires a categorical bar on life without parole for juveniles, or at least for those 14 and younger").

Accordingly, the panel rejects the Defendants' claim that a presumption against a sentence of life without parole for juvenile offenders was created by Miller and Montgomery. The Court's holding that a sentence of life without parole will be rare and uncommon is sufficient to underscore its reasoning without the need for a presumption. Our decision is in accord with our Supreme Court's "reluctance to 'go further than what is affirmatively commanded by the High Court' without 'a common law history or a policy directive from our Legislature,'" as previously stated. Batts, 66 A.3d at 296.

En Banc Answer: Miller and Montgomery do not create a presumption against a life without parole sentence. However, consistent with the holding in Miller, the sentence of life without parole will only be applied in the rarest, most uncommon, cases.

5. Whether the Commonwealth must establish beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant's crime reflects permanent incorrigibility, irreparable corruption or irretrievable depravity before such defendant may receive a sentence of life without parole.

The proceedings before the Court are sentencings, not trials, required as a result of the U.S. Supreme Court's decision in Montgomery. Neither Miller nor Montgomery required prosecutors to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant's crime reflects permanent incorrigibility, irreparable corruption, or irretrievable depravity. The resentencing hearing is intended to afford the defendant an opportunity to present evidence which "gives effect to Miller's substantive holding that life without parole is an excessive sentence for children whose crimes reflect transient immaturity." Montgomery, 136 S.Ct. at 735. As further stated "prisoners like Montgomery must be given the opportunity to show their crime did not reflect irreparable corruption; and, if it did not, their hope for some years of life outside prison walls must be restored." Id. at 736-37.

Therefore, in those cases where the Commonwealth seeks life without parole, the Commonwealth must present evidence to establish the defendant was so irretrievably depraved that rehabilitation is impossible. See Id. at 733 (“[Miller] recognized that a sentencer might encounter the rare juvenile offender who exhibits such irretrievable depravity that rehabilitation is impossible and life without parole is justified. But in light of ‘children’s diminished culpability and heightened capacity for change,’ Miller made clear that ‘appropriate occasions for sentencing juveniles to this harshest possible penalty will be uncommon’”).

En Banc Answer: At sentencing, there is no requirement that the Commonwealth establish beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant is permanently incorrigible, irreparably corrupt or irretrievably depraved before receiving a sentence of life without parole. However, in cases where the Commonwealth seeks life without parole, the Commonwealth must establish that the defendant is that “rare juvenile offender” as described in Miller and Montgomery above.

6. Whether the defendant has a right to have a jury determine if he or she is permanently incorrigible, irreparably corrupt or irretrievably depraved prior to the imposition of a sentence of life without parole.<sup>10</sup>

Again, the Defendants do not cite any language in Miller or Montgomery that states that, at a resentencing, a jury is required to determine if a defendant is permanently incorrigible, irreparably corrupt, or irretrievably depraved prior to the imposition of a sentence of life without parole. As previously stated, the Supreme Court’s intention was not to place an unnecessary burden on States in correcting Eighth Amendment violations on juvenile lifers. See Montgomery, 136 A.3d at 735 (“When a new substantive rule of constitutional law is established, the Court is careful to limit the scope of any attendant procedural requirement to avoid intruding more than necessary upon States' sovereign administration of their criminal justice system); Ford v. Wainwright, 477 U.S. 399, 416–17 (1986) (“[W]e leave to the State[s] the task of developing appropriate ways to enforce the constitutional restriction upon [their] execution of sentences”). Sentencing after a defendant’s conviction in Pennsylvania is the responsibility of the judge not the jury. The same holds true for resentencing.

<sup>10</sup> Since this question could impact a substantial number of juvenile lifer cases pending before the Court, notwithstanding the Commonwealth’s claim that the defendants’ lack standing to raise this question, this Court will address this question of law.

Defendants’ reliance on Appendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466 (2000) and Alleyne v. United States, 133 S. Ct. 2151 (2013), is not dispositive of this question. In Appendi, the Court held “[o]ther than the fact of a prior conviction, any fact that increases the penalty for a crime beyond the prescribed statutory maximum must be submitted to a jury, and proved beyond a reasonable doubt.” 530 U.S. at 490. There was no increase in the statutory maximum for juvenile lifers after Miller or Montgomery. The maximum that these Defendants could receive before the Supreme Court decisions was life without parole; and the maximum sentence is still life. However, after Miller and Montgomery, the Court has now made it possible for juvenile lifers to have “hope for some years of life outside of prison walls.” Montgomery, 136 S.Ct. at 737. Thus, the penalty is reduced, after Miller and Montgomery, by eliminating a mandatory life without parole sentence and directing a period of life outside of prison walls, except in the rarest cases. Even in the rarest of cases, the sentence is not increased, it remains the same, but only after consideration of the factors enunciated in Miller and Montgomery.

In addition, in Alleyne, the Court held that “facts that increase the mandatory minimum sentence are therefore elements and must be submitted to the jury and found beyond a reasonable doubt.” 133 S. Ct. at 2158. In juvenile lifer cases, the Miller Court held that mandatory minimum sentences of life without possibility of parole were unconstitutional for juveniles, which is the opposite of the issue addressed by the Court in Alleyne. In addition, the Court recognized that not all facts that influences a judge's discretion must be submitted to a jury:

In holding that facts that increase mandatory minimum sentences must be submitted to the jury, we take care to note what our holding does not entail. Our ruling today does not mean that any fact that influences judicial discretion must be found by a jury. We have long recognized that broad sentencing discretion, informed by judicial factfinding, does not violate the Sixth Amendment. See, e.g., Dillon v. United States, 560 U.S. —, —, 130 S.Ct. 2683, 2692, 177 L.Ed.2d 271 (2010) (“[W]ithin established limits[,] ... the exercise of [sentencing] discretion does not contravene the Sixth Amendment even if it is informed by judge-found facts” (emphasis deleted and internal quotation marks omitted)); Apprendi, 530 U.S., at 481, 120 S.Ct. 2348 (“[N]othing in this history suggests that it is impermissible for judges to exercise discretion—taking into consideration various factors relating both to offense and offender—in imposing a judgment within the range prescribed by statute”).

Id. at 2163. Thus, Apprendi and Alleyne do not apply in these cases. Moreover, Miller and Montgomery do not require a jury determination that the defendant was permanently incorrigible, irreparably corrupt, or irretrievably depraved prior to the imposition of a sentence of life without parole. Miller requires that there be a judicial consideration of the appropriate age-related factors. It is recognized in Pennsylvania that sentencing is a judicial function and not a function for the jury, except at sentencing in capital cases. These are not capital cases.

En Banc Answer: A jury is not required to determine whether a defendant is permanently incorrigible, irreparably corrupt or irretrievably depraved prior to the imposition of a sentence of life without parole.

7. Whether expert testimony is required to establish that the defendant's crime reflects permanent incorrigibility, irreparable corruption or irretrievable depravity.

The Defendants' brief states “[c]iting Roper v. Simmons, 125 S. Ct. 1183 (2005) and Graham v. Florida, 130 S. Ct. 2011 (2010), for the proposition that ‘children are constitutionally different from adults for the purposes of sentencing,’ the United States Supreme Court in Miller noted that the truth of the pronouncement expressed in its opinions 'rested not only on common sense—on what every parent knows'—but on science and social science as well,' 132 S. Ct. at 2464 (citations omitted)." Defendants' Brief at 18. Defendants point to this statement by the Supreme Court as support for its assertion that expert testimony is required for these juvenile lifer cases. See Defendants' Brief p. 18 ("For this reason, expert evidence is critical to a competent understanding of whether a particular offender's conduct can be found to so deviate from normative behavior as to reflect permanent incorrigibility, irreparable corruption, or irretrievable depravity").

This panel finds that the quote from Miller does not establish that expert testimony is required to determine whether a particular offender's conduct can be found to so deviate from normative behavior as to reflect permanent incorrigibility, irreparable corruption, or irretrievable depravity. Rather, the U.S. Supreme Court's statement summarizes the type of evidence it considered in arriving at the conclusion that children are constitutionally different from adults. The Courts' conclusion is at the core of its ultimate holding and therefore binding as juvenile lifers are resentenced. Moreover, the Pennsylvania Supreme Court has held that "the admission of expert testimony is a matter addressed to the discretion of the trial court." Commonwealth v. Delbridge, 855 A.2d 27, 46 (Pa. 2003). Expert testimony may be introduced at a resentencing hearing by either party, but is not mandated by Miller or Montgomery.

In addition, Defendants' contend that "Life without possibility of parole is only permitted upon proof demonstrating beyond a reasonable doubt that the juvenile is permanently incorrigible. Expert testimony of incorrigibility is the only method by which the fact finder can make that assessment." Defendants' Brief at 20. As previously stated, neither Miller nor

Montgomery require proof beyond a reasonable doubt. Whether expert testimony is necessary will be determined on a case-by-case basis.

En Banc Answer: While expert testimony may be introduced at resentencing by either party, if necessary, expert testimony is not required to establish that the defendant's crime reflects permanent incorrigibility, irreparable corruption or irretrievable depravity.

8. Whether Pa.R.Crim.P. Rule 573 governs the disclosure of any expert testimony.

The Defendants filed petitions under the Post-Conviction Relief Act ("PCRA"), seeking relief as a result of the Miller and Montgomery decisions. The resentencing hearings are post-conviction proceedings. These cases are not pretrial proceedings governed by Pa.R.Crim.P. Rule 573. Requests for discovery will be determined by the Court in its' discretion. In these cases, pursuant to GCR No. 1, the "Exhibit A – JLWSOP Conference Order," specifically schedules the date when "Parties shall identify and submit Curriculum Vitae and any corresponding reports from all experts thirty (30) days prior to the resentencing hearing." So in the event that expert testimony is expected to be introduced by either party, the Conference Order will address disclosure.

En Banc Answer: PCRA Rules and GCR No. 1 regulate the disclosure of evidence.

9. Whether, in accordance with Graham, Miller, and Montgomery, affording defendants a "meaningful opportunity" for release if life without parole is not imposed means release before defendant reaches, or is approaching, his/her life expectancy, and whether defacto life sentences are constitutionally barred.

Defendants' brief on this questions begins by stating that Miller and Montgomery create a "presumption of parole eligibility and require a child to be found irreparably corrupt before receiving a life without parole sentence, even if that sentence is expressed as a lengthy term of years. See Miller, 132 S.Ct. 2433 (2012); Montgomery, 135 S.Ct. 733–35 (2016)." Defendants' Brief at 21. This panel first notes that neither Miller nor Montgomery addressed the question of whether sentencing a juvenile to a lengthy term of years violates the Eighth Amendment. Further, the cases cited by the Defendants do not “constitutionally bar” lengthy sentences. For example, in State v. Null, the Iowa Supreme Court, in holding that Miller applied to an aggregate minimum sentence of 52.5 years, did not find such sentences to be unconstitutional.<sup>11</sup> 836 N.W.2d 41, 74 (Iowa 2013). It remanded the case and required that the sentencing court apply the factors set forth in Miller. “Instead, we conclude [our state constitution] requires that a district court recognize and apply the core teachings of Roper, Graham, and Miller in making sentencing decisions for long prison terms involving juveniles.” Id. at 74.

Similarly, in Bear Cloud v. State, found that a lengthy aggregate minimum sentence of 45 years does not provide “a ‘meaningful opportunity’ to demonstrate the ‘maturity and rehabilitation’ required to obtain release and reenter society as required by Graham,” 334 P.3d 132, 142 (Wyo. 2014). The Wyoming Supreme Court, however, also did not hold that such sentences were constitutionally barred. It required sentencing courts within its jurisdiction to follow a process that considers the factors set forth in Miller. “The United States Supreme Court’s Eighth Amendment jurisprudence requires that a process be followed before we make the judgment that juvenile ‘offenders never will be fit to reenter society.’ That process must be applied to the entire sentencing package, when the sentence is life without parole, or when

<sup>11</sup> “Because of our disposition of this case, it would be premature at this time to consider issues that need not be decided today. For instance, we do not consider whether the sentence in this case would be cruel and unusual under a gross proportionality or any other type of proportionality analysis. Any proportionality question will be considered only after the district court applies the principles of Miller to Null’s sentence. Further, we do not decide whether mandatory minimum sentences for adults may be automatically imposed upon juveniles without consideration of the diminished culpability of juvenile defendants. Similarly, like in Miller, we do not decide whether lengthy sentences of fifty years in prison or more are categorically banned. We simply conclude that under article I, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution, this case must be remanded to the district court for resentencing in light of the requirement of Miller that the district court consider all that was said in Roper and its progeny about the distinctive qualities of youth. We emphasize that the sole issue on remand is whether Null may be required to serve 52.5 years in prison before he is eligible for parole consideration.” Id. at 76.

aggregate sentences result in the functional equivalent of life without parole.” Bear Cloud, 334 P.3d at 144 (internal citations omitted).

On the other hand, these cases recognize the split among courts across the nation on this question. Some courts follow the Iowa and Wyoming courts and extend Miller to lengthy sentences. Other courts have chosen to view Miller and Montgomery narrowly and hold that those cases only apply to life without possibility of parole:

We also recognize that some courts have held Miller does not apply where the lengthy sentence is the result of aggregate sentences. See, e.g., Bunch v. Smith, 685 F.3d 546, 550–51 (6th Cir.2012) (holding Miller does not apply to an eighty-nine-year sentence resulting from consecutive fixed-term sentences for multiple nonhomicide offenses), cert. denied, 569 U.S. —, 133 S.Ct. 1996, 185 L.Ed.2d 865 (2013); Walle v. State, 99 So.3d 967, 972–73 (Fla.Dist.Ct.App.2012) (holding Miller does not apply where the defendant received a ninety-two-year aggregate sentence). Cf. Henry v. State, 82 So.3d 1084, 1089 (Fla.Dist.Ct.App.2012) (holding Graham does not apply to an aggregate term-of-years sentence totaling ninety years).

State v. Null, 836 N.W.2d at 73. In addition, in a recent case, the New Jersey Supreme Court found that “Miller applies with equal strength to a sentence that is the practical equivalent of life without parole. Defendants who serve lengthy term-of-years sentences that amount to life without parole should be no worse off than defendants whose sentences carry that formal designation. The label alone cannot control; we decline to elevate form over substance.” State v. Zuber, 152 A.3d 197, 212 (2017) (internal citations omitted). That court also noted the split in court decisions on this issue:

Some State courts have reached the same conclusion. See, e.g., People v. Caballero, 55 Cal.4th 262, 145 Cal.Rptr.3d 286, 282 P.3d 291, 295 (2012); Casiano v. Comm’r of Corr., 317 Conn. 52, 115 A.3d 1031, 1044 (2015), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 136 S.Ct. 1364, 194 L.Ed.2d 376 (2016); Henry v. State, 175 So.3d 675, 680 (Fla. 2015); Brown v. State, 10 N.E.3d 1, 8 (Ind. 2014); State v. Null, 836 N.W.2d 41, 71 (Iowa 2013); Cloud v. State, 334 P.3d 132, 144 (Wyo. 2014); see also Moore v. Biter, 725 F.3d 1184, 1191–92 (9th Cir. 2013).

Others have not. See, e.g., Adams v. State, 288 Ga. 695, 707 S.E.2d 359, 365 (2011); State v. Brown, 118 So.3d 332, 332 (La. 2013); Vasquez v. Commonwealth, 291 Va. 232, 781 S.E.2d 920, 926, cert. denied, — U.S. —, 137 S.Ct. 568, 196 L.Ed.2d 448 (2016); see also Bunch v. Smith, 685 F.3d 546, 551 (6th Cir. 2012), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 133 S. Ct. 1996, 185 L.Ed. 2d 865 (2013).

Id. at 212.

However our Supreme Court has stated its intention to take a narrow view of Miller. See Batts, 66 A.3d at 295. At this time, we are constrained to adopt a narrow view of Miller unless and until our appellate courts, or the legislature, directs otherwise. Therefore, since Graham, Miller, and Montgomery only applied to sentences of life without possibility of parole, Defendants' assertions that a de facto life sentence without parole is constitutionally barred, is without merit.

En Banc Answer: Lengthy sentences are not constitutionally barred; the Court will determine the sentence to be imposed after consideration of the factors in Miller.

10. Whether there are constitutional limits on victim impact testimony.

Defendants Brief asserts that “[t]he Constitutional limits on victim impact testimony for a juvenile resentencing should be the same as those applicable to the penalty phase in capital cases.” Defendants’ Brief at 26. This Court agrees with our Superior Court when it noted that cases involving juveniles facing life without possibility of parole are different from adults facing the death penalty. Commonwealth v. Batts, 125 A.3d 33, 44–45 (Pa. Super. 2015) reargument denied (Nov. 10, 2015) appeal granted in part, 135 A.3d 176 (Pa. 2016) (“Specifically, Appellant contends a juvenile facing a sentence of life imprisonment without parole is entitled to the same due process as an adult facing the death penalty... We conclude Appellant’s argument lacks merit. We cannot discern any constitutional due process basis or statutory grounds to provide juveniles facing life imprisonment without parole with the same procedural due process protections as adults facing the death penalty.”). Moreover “admission of evidence, including victim impact evidence, rests within the sound discretion of the trial court ....” Commonwealth v. Bryant, 67 A.3d 716, 726 (Pa. 2013).<sup>12</sup> Therefore, the Defendants’ claim is without merit.

En Banc Answer: There is no requirement that victim impact testimony for a juvenile resentencing have the same constitutional limitations as those applicable to the penalty phase in capital cases. Victim impact evidence is admissible at resentencing, subject to the judge’s discretion. Any challenges to the admissibility of such evidence will be evaluated on a case-by-case basis.

11. Whether the Court must provide funds to the defendant for a mitigator sufficiently before the time of sentencing so that counsel can adequately and effectively prepare his or her client at sentencing. 12. Whether the Court must provide funds to the defendant for expert witnesses to assist the defense sufficiently before the time of sentencing so that counsel can adequately and effectively prepare his or her client at sentencing.

It should first be noted that “the decision to appoint an expert witness is within the sound discretion of the trial court and will not be disturbed except for a clear abuse of that discretion.” United States ex rel Dessus v. Pennsylvania, 316 F.Supp. 411 (E.D. Pa. 1970), aff’d, 452 F.2d 557 (3d Cir. 1971), cert. denied, 409 U.S. 853 (1972); Commonwealth v. Gelormo, 475 A.2d 765 (Pa. Super. 1984). In addition, there is no obligation on the part of the court to pay for the services of an expert. Commonwealth v. Williams, 561 A.2d 714, 718 (Pa. 1989) (citing Commonwealth v. Box, 391 A.2d 1316 (Pa. 1978)); Commonwealth v. Rochester, 451 A.2d 690 (Pa. Super. 1982); Commonwealth v. Carter, 643 A.2d 61, 73 (Pa. 1994).

Further “[A] defendant does not have an absolute right to a court-appointed investigator, and appointment of an investigator is vested in the trial court’s discretion.” Commonwealth v.

<sup>12</sup> This is also consistent with § 9711. Sentencing procedure for murder of the first-degree. “(2) In the sentencing hearing, evidence concerning the victim and the impact that the death of the victim has had on the family of the victim is admissible. Additionally, evidence may be presented as to any other matter that the Court deems relevant and admissible on the question of the sentence to be imposed.” 42 Pa.C.S.A. § 9711.

Wholaver, 989 A.2d 883, 895 (Pa. 2010) (internal citations omitted). In Wholaver, a capital case, our Supreme Court “perceive[d] no abuse of discretion” by the trial court where it afforded the defendant a private investigator for 40 hours, where the defendant “did not specify his investigative needs to the trial court.” Id. at 895. Based on Wholaver, it is clear that it is within the sound discretion of the courts to grant defendants’ request for funds for mitigators and/or expert witnesses to assist them in preparing for resentencing. Some of the Defendants in this matter have filed motions for funds for mitigators, which have been reviewed by the court. In Commonwealth v. Reid, our Supreme Court stated:

“The provision of public funds to hire experts to assist in the defense against criminal charges is a decision vested in the sound discretion of the court and a denial thereof will not be reversed absent an abuse of that discretion. At the trial stage, “an accused is entitled to the assistance of experts necessary to prepare a defense.” This court has never decided that such an appointment is required in a PCRA proceeding. We must review the PCRA court’s exercise of its discretion in the context of the request, that an expert’s testimony is necessary to establish his entitlement to relief under 42 Pa.C.S. § 9543(a)(2)(vi), the provision of the PCRA which deals with claims of innocence based on after-discovered evidence.

99 A.3d 470, 505 (Pa. 2014) (internal citations omitted). The Court has and will review requests for mitigators and experts on a case-by-case basis.<sup>13</sup>

En Banc Answer: There is no requirement that the Court provide funds for a mitigator or expert witnesses in connection with these resentencing. The Court has and will continue to decide requests for funds on a case-by-case basis.

<sup>13</sup> Finally, to the extent that Defendants rely on the American Bar Association’s 2003 Guidelines for the Appointment and Performance of Defense Counsel in Death Penalty Cases, and the 2003 Supplementary Guidelines for the Mitigation Function of Defense Teams in Death Penalty Cases, this Court has already established that juvenile lifer cases are different from death penalty cases and there is no “constitutional due process basis or statutory ground to provide juveniles facing life imprisonment without parole with the same procedural due process protections as adults facing the death penalty.” Batts, 125 A.3d at 45. As such Defendants’ question of law is without merit.

13. Whether, if the Commonwealth is seeking imposition of life without parole, the Commonwealth must provide notice of such intent at the conclusion of the JLSWOP status hearing at which the date for resentencing is set, and whether such notice must set for the specific basis for concluding that the defendant is permanently incorrigible, irreparably corrupt, or irretrievably depraved.

The Commonwealth asserts that because it is not seeking life without possibility of parole for any of the above-named Defendants, they lack standing to raise this question of law. However, because this question may apply to a number of juvenile lifer cases pending before the Court and will provide guidance to the bar of the FJD's interpretation of current applicable law and controlling precedent, the Court will address this question. Additionally, the Commonwealth contends that because Defendants are relying on Pa.R.Crim.P. 802 (notice of aggravating circumstances), which applies to "cases in which [a] death sentence is authorized" it has "nothing to do with Miller." Commonwealth's Brief at 13.

We agree Pa.R.Crim.P. 802 is not applicable to these resentencings. However, the Comment for Rule 802 states its purpose is "intended to give the defendant sufficient time and information to prepare for the sentencing hearing." Pa.R.Crim.P. 802. Fairness dictates that juvenile lifers should also be given notice in order to adequately prepare when the Commonwealth intends to seek a sentence of life without parole. To require the Commonwealth to provide notice is appropriate. Miller noted the similarity of a juvenile life without possibility of parole sentence to a death sentence when it said "Graham also likened life-without-parole sentences for juveniles and the death penalty. That decision recognized that life-without-parole sentences 'share some characteristics with death sentences that are shared by no other sentences.'" 132 S.Ct. at 2459. Therefore this Court agrees with the Defendants that if the Commonwealth is seeking imposition of life without parole, the Commonwealth must provide notice of such intent at the conclusion of the JLSWOP status hearing and before the Court schedules the date for the resentencing hearing. Further, the Commonwealth shall state its intention to seek life without parole in the Concise Statement required by GCR No. 1, paragraph 1 (a) and (b).

En Banc Answer: If the Commonwealth is seeking a sentence of life without parole, it shall provide notice of such intent at the conclusion of the JLSWOP status hearing and in its Concise Statement.

14. Whether the parties must disclose thirty days prior to the resentencing hearing any evidence or witnesses the parties intend to introduce at sentencing, and whether, in the event of any challenge to the admissibility of such evidence, a judge other than the sentencing judge shall be assigned to rule on the challenge.

This is not a question of law but rather a request for guidance as to the procedure the Court intends to follow in these juvenile lifer cases. Defendants did not cite to any authority for their proposition that the parties must disclose any evidence or witnesses that they intend to introduce 30 days prior to sentencing; nor for their assertion that in the event of any challenge to the admissibility of such evidence, a judge other than the sentencing judge shall be assigned to rule on the challenge. Pursuant to GCR No. 1, in the JLSWOP Conference Order, the Court schedules a date for when all relevant resentencing information must be filed.

With respect to the Defendants' question concerning challenges to admissibility of evidence, the fact that a judge has been exposed to information that is later determined to be inadmissible does not preclude the judge from being fair and impartial. Our Supreme Court has stated "we note that it is well-settled that [e]ven if prejudicial information was considered by the trial court, a judge, as fact finder, is presumed to disregard inadmissible evidence and consider only competent evidence." Commonwealth v. Fears, 836 A.2d 52, 71 n. 19 (Pa. 2003) cert.

denied, 545 U.S. 1141 (2005) (internal citation omitted); Commonwealth v. Kearney, 92 A.3d 51, 61 (Pa. Super. 2014).

Nonetheless, if the judge believes he or she cannot be impartial the remedy is recusal. See Id. at 60 (“however, this standard requires that the judge recuse himself not only when he doubts his own ability to preside impartially, but whenever he ‘believes his impartiality can be reasonably questioned’”); Commonwealth v. Lemanski, 529 A.2d 1085, 1088–89 (Pa. 1987) (quoting Commonwealth v. Goodman, A.2d 652, 654 (Pa. Super. 1973)); See also Commonwealth v. Abu-Jamal, 720 A.2d 79, 89 (Pa. 1998) reargument denied (Oct. 29, 1998); Commonwealth v. Benchoff, 700 A.2d 1289, 1294–95 (Pa. Super. 1997) (citing In the Interest of McFall, 617 A.2d 707, 712 (Pa. 1992)); Commonwealth v. Williams, 69 A.3d 735, 749 (Pa. Super. 2013). This approach is less burdensome and is in line with Montgomery’s intention not place an onerous burden on States. See Montgomery 136 S.Ct. at 736. Defendants’ claim is without merit.

En Banc Answer: The procedure for the disclosure of documents, witnesses etc. will continue to be set forth in the JSLWOP Conference Order issued when the resentencing hearing is scheduled. The resentencing judge will determine the admissibility of evidence.

15. Whether Dawson v. Delaware, 503 U.S. 159 (1992), governs the admissibility at the resentencing hearing of any evidence of gang membership.

Defendants’ Brief at 34 states “[o]n resentencing, a juvenile’s gang membership is inadmissible unless relevant to either the crime he is being sentenced for or to violent or criminal acts he has committed in prison.” The Defendants lacks standing to raise this question. This is such a fact-specific question and the Defendants has provided no facts, but again appears to be asking this panel to make a general rule on a matter that is fact-specific and should be resolved on a case-by-case basis. As such, there is no concrete issue here for the panel to address.

Instead, the Defendants are inviting this panel to provide an advisory or abstract opinion. As the Commonwealth notes where it cites Markham v. Wolfe, 136 A.3d 134, 140 (Pa. 2016):

In Pennsylvania, a party to litigation must establish as a threshold matter that he or she has standing to bring an action. Stilp v. Commonwealth, 596 Pa. 62, 940 A.2d 1227, 1233 (2007). ...In our Court's landmark decision on standing, we explained that a person who is not adversely impacted by the matter he or she is litigating does not enjoy standing to initiate the court's dispute resolution machinery. William Penn Parking Garage v. City of Pittsburgh, 464 Pa. 168, 346 A.2d 269, 280-81 (1975) (plurality). This is consistent with our jurisprudential approach that eschews advisory or abstract opinions, but, rather, requires the resolution of real and concrete issues. As we explained in In re Hickson, 821 A.2d at 1243, the party to the legal action must be "aggrieved."

In determining whether a party is aggrieved, courts consider whether the litigant has a substantial, direct, and immediate interest in the matter. To have a substantial interest, the concern in the outcome of the challenge must surpass "the common interest of all citizens in procuring obedience to the law." Id. An interest is direct if it is an interest that mandates demonstration that the matter "caused harm to the party's interest." Id. Finally, the concern is immediate "if that causal connection is not remote or speculative." City of Philadelphia, 838 A.2d at 577. The "keystone to standing in these terms is that the person must be negatively impacted in some real and direct fashion." Pittsburgh Palisades Park, LLC v. Commonwealth, 585 Pa. 196, 888 A.2d 655, 660 (2005).

Commonwealth Brief at 2.

Even if this Court were to rely on the Defendants' offering of Delaware v. Dawson, 503 U.S. 159, 160 (1992) for the proposition that "...[t]he First and Fourteenth Amendments prohibit the introduction in a capital sentencing proceeding of the fact that the defendant was a member of an organization called the Aryan Brotherhood, where the evidence has no relevance to the issues being decided in the proceeding,' This logic applies equally to juvenile resentencing." Defendants' Brief at 34. This claim is meritless. There is nothing in Graham or Miller that require such a finding or limit the type of evidence a court can consider in re-sentencing a defendant. Even assuming, arguendo, that the Defendant's assertion was true this panel has no facts in the instant cases, or any other juvenile lifer cases, upon which to determine the relevance of any evidence of gang membership in the instant cases. The Defendants have no standing to raise this question.

En Banc Answer: Defendants lack standing and the assertion that Dawson v. Delaware, 503 U.S. 159 (1992), governs the admissibility at the resentencing hearing of any evidence of gang evidence is without merit.
