

STATE OF MICHIGAN
IN THE SUPREME COURT

---

PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF MICHIGAN,
Plaintiff-Appellee,

v

Supreme Court No. 162425
Court of Appeals No. 342440
Wayne CC: 92-0334-01-FC

MONTEZ STOVALL,
Defendant-Appellant.

---

BRIEF OF AMICI CURIAE JUVENILE LAW CENTER, JUVENILE SENTENCING PROJECT, AND AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION OF MICHIGAN IN SUPPORT OF DEFENDANT-APPELLANT STOVALL'S APPLICATION FOR LEAVE TO APPEAL

---

Tessa B. Bialek (P78080)
Juvenile Sentencing Project
Legal Clinic, Quinnipiac University
School of Law
275 Mount Carmel Ave.
Hamden, CT 06518
(203) 582-3238
tessa.bialek@quinnipiac.edu

Marsha L. Levick (PA 22535)
Juvenile Law Center
1315 Walnut Street, 4th Floor
Philadelphia, PA 19107
(215) 625-0551
mlevick@jlc.org

Daniel S. Korobkin (P72842)
Bonsitu Kitaba (P78822)
American Civil Liberties Union Fund
of Michigan
2966 Woodward Ave.
Detroit, MI 48201
(313) 578-6824
dkorobkin@aclumich.org

Counsel for Amici Curiae

RECEIVED by MSC 2/18/2021 4:17:50 PM

TABLE OF CONTENTS

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES ..... iii

INTERESTS AND IDENTITIES OF AMICI CURIAE ..... 1

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT ..... 3

ARGUMENT ..... 4

    THE COURT SHOULD GRANT LEAVE TO APPEAL TO ADDRESS
    CONSTITUTIONAL DEFICIENCIES IN MICHIGAN’S SECOND-DEGREE LIFE SENTENCES AS APPLIED TO YOUTH..... 4

    I.    Due to Wide Discretion Afforded Michigan’s Parole Board, and Its Practice of Ensuring That “Life Means Life,” People Sentenced to Parolable Life in Michigan for Childhood Offenses Do Not Have a Realistic or Meaningful
    Opportunity for Release ..... 5

    II.   To Comply with Constitutional Requirements, Michigan Must Provide People
    Sentenced to Parolable Life as Youth a Meaningful Opportunity for Release
    Through the Parole Process ..... 8

        A.    The Constitution Requires Consideration of Youth’s Categorical Differences from Adults Before Allowing Them to Die in Prison..... 9

        B.    Given Constitutionally Significant Differences Between Children and Adults, the Michigan Constitution and Eighth Amendment Prohibit Life Sentences When the Parole Board’s Policies and Practices Fail to Account for Youth and Fail to Order Release Based on an Assessment of Maturity and Rehabilitation..... 12

            1.    Michigan’s “cruel or unusual punishment” standard can be interpreted to prohibit life with parole sentences for children ..... 12

            2.    Life sentences imposed on youth that provide only a remote chance of parole violate the Eighth Amendment ..... 16

        C.    To Meet Constitutional Requirements, States Must Employ Parole
        Procedures to Ensure Youth Have a Realistic and Meaningful
        Opportunity for Release ..... 19

    III.  This Court Should Grant Leave to Appeal to Ensure that Michigan Provides Youth Sentenced to Parolable Life a Meaningful Opportunity for Release ..... 21

        A.    The Court Should Grant Leave to Appeal Because the Board’s
        Decisions Do Not Adequately Account for the Mitigating Circumstances of Youth and Post-Crime Maturity and Rehabilitation ..... 21

B. The Court Should Grant Leave to Appeal Because the Board Does Not Afford a Realistic Opportunity for Release ..... 24

C. This Court Should Grant Leave to Appeal Because Michigan Fails to Afford Adequate Procedural Protections to Ensure the Board Can Meaningfully Assess an Individual’s Maturation and Rehabilitation..... 26

CONCLUSION.....28

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Cases

Bellotti v Baird, 443 US 622; 99 S Ct 3035; 61 L Ed 2d 797 (1979)..... 12

Bey v Rubitschun, unpublished opinion of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan, issued October 23, 2007 (Docket No. 05-71318), 2007 WL 7705668, rev'd and remanded sub nom Foster v Booker, 595 F3d 353 (CA 6, 2010) ..... 10

Brown v Precythe, unpublished order of the United States District Court for the Western District of Missouri, issued October 12, 2018 (Docket No. 2:17-CV-04082-NKL), 2018 WL 4956519..... 23, 25

Casiano v Comm'r of Corr, 115 A.3d 1031 (Conn, 2015)..... 21

Diatchenko v Dist Attorney for Suffolk Dist, 27 NE 3d 349 (Mass, 2015)..... 35, 36

Flores v Stanford, unpublished order of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, issued September 20, 2019 (Docket No. 18 CV 2468-VB), 2019 WL 4572703..... 22, 30

Foster v Booker, 595 F3d 353 (CA 6, 2010) ..... 10

Funchess v Prince, unpublished order of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana, issued February 25, 2016 (Docket No. 14-2105), 2016 WL 756530 ..... 23, 33

Graham v Florida, 560 US 48; 130 S Ct 2011; 176 L Ed 2d 825 (2010) ..... passim

Greiman v Hodges, 79 F Supp 3d 933 (SD Iowa, 2015) ..... 24, 26

Hawkins v NY State Dep't of Corr & Cmty Supervision, 140 AD3d 34; 30 NYS3d 397 (2016)..... 24, 29

Hayden v Butler, 667 F App'x 416 (CA 4, 2016)..... 24

Hayden v Keller, 134 F Supp 3d 1000 (EDNC, 2015) ..... 24, 29

Hill v Snyder, 900 F3d 260 (CA 6, 2018)..... 2

Humphrey v Wilson, 652 SE2d 501 (Ga 2007)..... 18

JDB v North Carolina, 564 US 261; 131 S Ct 2394; 180 L Ed 2d 310 (2011)..... 12

Johnson v State, 215 So3d 1237 (Fla, 2017) ..... 24, 31

King v. Landreman, unpublished order of the United States District Court for the Western District of Wisconsin, issued June 4, 2019 (Docket No. 19-cv-338-jdp), 2019 WL 2355545 ..... 22

Maryland Restorative Justice Initiative v Hogan, unpublished memorandum opinion of the United States District Court for the District of Maryland, issued February 3, 2017 (Docket No. ELH-16-1021), 2017 WL 467731 ..... 23, 31, 33

Miller v Alabama, 567 US 460; 132 S Ct 2455; 183 L Ed 2d 407 (2012) ..... passim

Montgomery v Louisiana, 136 S Ct 718; 193 L Ed 2d 599 (2016)..... 1

People v Bullock, 485 NW2d 866 (Mich 1992)..... 16

People v Carp, 496 Mich 440; 852 NW2d 801 (2014), vacated 136 S Ct 1355; 194 L Ed 2d 339 (2016) ..... 2

People v Dipiazza, 778 NW2d 264 (Mich Ct App 2009) ..... 18

People v Hallak, 873 NW2d 811 (Mich Ct App 2015), rev'd on other grounds 876 NW2d 523 (Mich 2016)..... 17

People v Hill, 267 Mich App 345, 349; 705 NW2d 139 (Mich. Ct. App. 2005)..... 9, 10

People v Launsburry, 551 NW2d 460 (Mich Ct App 1996)..... 18

People v Lorentzen, 194 NW2d 827 (Mich 1972)..... 16, 19

People v Skinner, 502 Mich 89; 917 NW2d 292 (2018)..... 2

People v Snow, 386 Mich 586 (1972)..... 20

People v Wines, 323 Mich App 343 (2018), appeal held in abeyance by People v Wines, 924 NW2d 589 (Mich 2019)..... 19, 20

Rodriguez de Quijas v Shearson/Am Exp, Inc, 490 US 477 (1989) ..... 17

Roper v Simmons, 543 US 551; 125 S Ct 1183; 161 L Ed 2d 1 (2005)..... 12, 14, 27

State v Null, 836 NW2d 41 (Iowa 2013) ..... 21

State v Young, 794 SE2d 274 (NC, 2016)..... 24, 29, 33

State v. Moore; 76 NE3d 1127 (Ohio, 2016) cert denied 138 S Ct 62, 199 L Ed 2d 183 (2017)..... 21

Constitutional Provisions

Const 1963, art 1, § 16 ..... 12, 14, 15, 16

US Const, Am VIII ..... 14

Statutes

Ark Code 16-93-621 ..... 22, 24

Cal Penal Code 3041.5..... 28

Cal Penal Code 3041.7..... 27

Cal Penal Code 4801..... 22, 24

Conn Gen Stat 54-125a..... 27, 28

DC Code 24-403.03 ..... 23, 24, 28

Fla Stat 921.1402 ..... 27, 28

Haw Rev Stat 706-670 ..... 27, 28

La Rev Stat 15:574.4..... 28

MCL 769.25 ..... 3

MCL 769.25a ..... 3

MCL 791.233 ..... 5, 7, 21

MCL 791.234..... passim

MCL 791.235 ..... 5, 6, 21

MDOC Policy Directive 06.05.100 ..... 5, 21

MDOC Policy Directive 06.05.103 ..... 5, 21

MDOC Policy Directive 06.05.104 ..... passim

MDOC Policy Directive 06.05.105 ..... 6

ND Cent Code 12.1-32-13.1 ..... 23, 24

Ohio Rev Code 2967.132..... 22, 24, 27

Ore Rev Code 144.397..... 23

RI Parole Board, 2018 Guidelines § 1.5 ..... 22, 24

Va Code 531.136 ..... 24, 28

W Va Code 62-12-13b ..... 22, 24

Rules

MCR 7.312(H)(4) ..... 1

Other Authorities

ACLU of Michigan, Second Chances: Juveniles Serving Life Without Parole in Michigan Prisons (2004) ..... 2

American Civil Liberties Union, False Hope: How Parole Systems Fail Youth Serving Extreme Sentences (2016)..... 19

Br for Am Psych Ass’n et al. as Amici Curiae Supporting Pet’rs, Graham v Florida, 560 US 48; 130 S Ct 2011; 176 L Ed 2d 825 (2010) (Nos. 08-7412, 08-7621)..... 10

Citizens Alliance on Prisons & Public Spending, No Way Out: Michigan’s Parole Board Redefines the Meaning of “Life,” (2004) ..... 8

Frase, Limiting Excessive Prison Sentences Under Federal and State Constitutions, 11 U Pa J Const L 39 (2008)..... 12

Human Rights Watch, Against All Odds: Prison Conditions for Young Offenders Serving Life Without Parole Sentences in the United States (2012)..... 27

MDOC, Report to the Legislature: Parolable Lifers with Lifer Law Interview Parole Board Actions (2018)
<https://www.michigan.gov/documents/corrections/Sec.\_615\_620527\_7.pdf> ..... 7

Michigan Department of Corrections, Parole from Past to Present
<https://www.michigan.gov/corrections/0,4551,7-119-1435\_11601-331908-,00.html>..... 7

Models for Change, Research on Pathways to Desistance: December 2012 Update ..... 11

Nellis, The Lives of Juvenile Lifers: Findings from a National Survey (The Sentencing Project, 2012) ..... 19, 26

Russell, Review for Release: Juvenile Offenders, State Parole Practices, and the Eighth Amendment, 89 Ind LJ 373 (2014) ..... 26, 27

Scott & Steinberg, Adolescent Development and the Regulation of Youth Crime, 18 The Future of Children 15 (2008)..... 9, 10

Steinberg & Scott, Less Guilty by Reason of Adolescence: Development Immaturity, Diminished Responsibility, and the Juveniles Death Penalty , 58 Am Psychologist 1009 (2003) .....	11
Steinberg, Give Adolescents the Time and Skills to Mature, and Most Offenders Will Stop (2014) .....	11
Steinberg, The Science of Adolescent Brain Development and Its Implications for Adolescent Rights and Responsibilities , in Bhabha, ed, Human Rights and Adolescence (2014) .....	10
Zuckerman, Behavioral Expressions and Biosocial Bases of Sensation Seeking (1994) .....	10

INTERESTS AND IDENTITIES OF AMICI CURIAE<sup>1</sup>

Juvenile Law Center advocates for rights, dignity, equity and opportunity for youth in the child welfare and justice systems through litigation, appellate advocacy and submission of amicus briefs, policy reform, public education, training, consulting, and strategic communications. Founded in 1975, Juvenile Law Center is the first non-profit public interest law firm for children in the country. Juvenile Law Center strives to ensure that laws, policies, and practices affecting youth advance racial and economic equity and are rooted in research, consistent with children's unique developmental characteristics, and reflective of international human rights values.

Juvenile Law Center has worked extensively on the issues of juvenile life without parole and de facto life sentences, serving as co-counsel for petitioner in the U.S. Supreme Court case Montgomery v Louisiana, 136 S Ct 718; 193 L Ed 2d 599 (2016), and filing amicus briefs in the U.S. Supreme Court in both Graham v Florida, 560 US 48; 130 S Ct 2011; 176 L Ed 2d 825 (2010), and Miller v Alabama, 567 US 460; 132 S Ct 2455; 183 L Ed 2d 407 (2012). Additionally, Juvenile Law Center has participated as amicus curiae in numerous juvenile life without parole and de facto life cases throughout the nation, including in the Michigan Supreme Court in People v Carp, 496 Mich 440; 852 NW2d 801 (2014), vacated 136 S Ct 1355; 194 L Ed 2d 339 (2016), and People v Skinner, 502 Mich 89; 917 NW2d 292 (2018).

The Juvenile Sentencing Project is a project of the Legal Clinic at Quinnipiac University School of Law. The Juvenile Sentencing Project focuses on issues relating to long prison sentences imposed on children. In particular, it researches and analyzes responses by courts and legislatures nationwide to the U.S. Supreme Court's decisions in Graham v Florida, 560 US 48; 130 S Ct

---

<sup>1</sup> Pursuant to MCR 7.312(H)(4), amici state that no counsel for a party authored this brief in whole or in part, nor did anyone, other than amici or their counsel, make a monetary contribution intended to fund the preparation or submission of the brief.

2011; 176 L Ed 2d 825 (2010), Miller v Alabama, 567 US 460; 132 S Ct 2455; 183 L Ed 2d 407 (2012), and Montgomery v Alabama, 136 S Ct 718; 193 L Ed 2d 599 (2016), and produces reports and memoranda for use by policymakers, courts, scholars, and advocates. The Juvenile Sentencing Project focuses its research in particular on the “meaningful opportunity to obtain release” standard applicable to juvenile offenders. Because of its dedication to pursuing research in this area of the law, the Juvenile Sentencing Project has an interest in assisting courts to develop an accurate understanding of the legal issues surrounding the standard.

The American Civil Liberties Union of Michigan (“ACLU”) is the Michigan affiliate of a nationwide, nonpartisan organization with over a million members dedicated to protecting the rights guaranteed by the United States Constitution. The ACLU has long advocated for an end to the practice of sentencing children in Michigan to life in prison, including through litigation, as amicus curiae, and through public education. See, e.g., Hill v Snyder, 900 F3d 260 (CA 6, 2018); People v Carp, 496 Mich 440, 852 NW2d 801 (2014), vacated, 136 S Ct 1355 (2016); ACLU of Michigan, Second Chances: Juveniles Serving Life Without Parole in Michigan Prisons (2004).

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

The United States Supreme Court has repeatedly admonished against the imposition of juvenile life sentences without consideration of the hallmark characteristics of youth. “The juvenile should not be deprived of the opportunity to achieve maturity of judgment and self-recognition of human worth and potential. . . . Life in prison without the possibility of parole gives no chance for fulfillment outside prison walls, no chance for reconciliation with society, no hope.” Graham v Florida, 560 US 48, 79; 130 S Ct 2011; 176 L Ed 2d 825 (2010); see also Miller v Alabama, 567 US 460, 479; 132 S Ct 2455; 183 L Ed 2d 407 (2012). A sentence imposed on a child in a nonhomicide case, whether formally labeled life without parole or not, is unconstitutional if it fails to provide a “meaningful opportunity to obtain release based on demonstrated maturity and rehabilitation.” Graham, 560 US at 75. This meaningful opportunity for release must also be provided to juvenile homicide offenders—except in the rarest of cases where the sentencer has determined, after giving mitigating effect to the circumstances and characteristics of youth, that the child is irreparably corrupt. Montgomery v Alabama, 136 S Ct 718, 733 (2016).

Michigan courts are now resentencing all youth who were unconstitutionally sentenced to life without any possibility of parole. See MCL 769.25, 769.25a. The majority of youth initially sentenced to mandatory life without parole have been resentenced, with the vast majority receiving term of years sentences. Only 7.6% of all resentenced individuals were re-sentenced to life without parole – a sentence now recognized as one that should only be imposed in the rarest of cases. Retroactive correction of the sentence to die in prison is precisely what the Eighth Amendment requires. Montgomery, 136 S Ct at 718.

But for individuals like petitioner, Montez Stovall—who pled guilty as a youth in exchange for the remote chance of receiving parole—the possibility of living outside of prison walls is likely foreclosed. Like other people in Michigan sentenced to life with the theoretical possibility of parole for childhood offenses, Mr. Stovall has no meaningful opportunity for release, which is what the Eighth Amendment and Michigan Constitutions require. No court has considered the mitigating circumstances of Mr. Stovall’s youth at the time of his offense, or whether Mr. Stovall is irreparably corrupt or permanently incorrigible such that he may constitutionally serve a sentence of life without a meaningful opportunity for parole or its equivalent. And now, Mr. Stovall is at the mercy of the Michigan Parole Board (the “Board”), which is not required to consider his youth at the time of the crime, or his post-crime maturity and rehabilitation, but instead exercises unfettered discretion in deciding whether even to consider an application for release review. Moreover, the Board’s stated “life means life” approach denies a realistic chance at release—only the smallest percentage of parolable lifers in Michigan are ever granted parole.

This system, which denies review and release to a population that science confirms will mature and reform with age, contravenes the clear constitutional mandate that juvenile offenders receive a “realistic” and “meaningful opportunity to obtain release based on demonstrated maturity and rehabilitation.” Graham, 560 US at 75, 82. This Court should grant leave to appeal to ensure that Michigan’s sentencing and parole system provides the realistic and meaningful opportunity for release to which Mr. Stovall is constitutionally entitled.

ARGUMENT

THE COURT SHOULD GRANT LEAVE TO APPEAL TO ADDRESS CONSTITUTIONAL DEFICIENCIES IN MICHIGAN’S SECOND-DEGREE LIFE SENTENCES AS APPLIED TO YOUTH

The United States Supreme Court’s directive that courts must consider youths’ diminished culpability, heightened vulnerability, and increased capacity for reform before condemning them to die in prison applies equally regardless of the mechanism that threatens to keep them in prison for life: “By making youth (and all that accompanies it) irrelevant to imposition of that harshest prison sentence, such a scheme poses too great a risk of disproportionate punishment.” Miller, 567 US at 479. Where, as here, a defendant is sentenced to life in prison without adequate consideration of youth, he must have a “realistic” and “meaningful opportunity for release based on demonstrated maturity and rehabilitation.” Graham, 560 US at 75, 82; Montgomery, 136 S Ct at 733. The Court recognized that “[t]he opportunity for release will be afforded to those who demonstrate the truth of Miller’s central intuition – that children who commit even heinous crimes are capable of change.” Montgomery, 136 S Ct at 736. The criteria and procedures that the Michigan Parole Board uses to assess Mr. Stovall’s suitability for release must account for his youth at the time of the crime and subsequent growth and change, and must provide a realistic, non-remote chance for release within his lifetime. The Board’s current policies, practices, and governing standards do not pass constitutional muster. This Court should intervene to ensure that Michigan is not condemning youth to die in prison based on the combination of a life sentence and a constitutionally inadequate parole process.

I. Due to Wide Discretion Afforded Michigan’s Parole Board, and Its Practice of Ensuring That “Life Means Life,” People Sentenced to Parolable Life in Michigan for Childhood Offenses Do Not Have a Realistic or Meaningful Opportunity for Release

The rules governing parole release for prisoners serving life with the possibility of parole, like Mr. Stovall, appear in statutes as well as in Michigan Department of Corrections policy directives. See generally MCL 791.233–791.235; MDOC Policy Directives 06.05.100, 06.05.103, and 06.05.104. No special protections are afforded to individuals who were sentenced for offenses committed when they were under the age of 18. Id. (providing no differentiation between adult lifers and juvenile lifers).

Parole may be granted or denied only after a public hearing. MCL 791.234(8)(c). But there are multiple hurdles a lifer such as Mr. Stovall must clear in order to reach the public hearing stage, each of which is decided at the unfettered discretion of the Board—or a single Board member. See generally Def's Br at 15–19. Most critically, parole-eligible individuals have no right to a public hearing. Rather, Michigan's parole system operates by affording parole-eligible individuals an interview with a single member of the Board after serving 10 years. MCL 791.234(8)(a). The Board member does not consider whether to grant parole, but rather whether to recommend that the rest of the Board hold a public hearing. MCL 791.234(8)(a), (c); MCL 791.234(9); MDOC Policy Directive 06.05.104 (M), (N). In other words, the Board member considers whether to consider granting parole.

No standards govern the interview or the Board member's ultimate decision to recommend a parole hearing. The would-be parolee receives only 30 days' notice of the interview, and the role of counsel is constrained. MCL 791.234(9)(a), (b); see also MDOC Policy Directive 06.05.104(T) (“[Attorneys] may not provide legal representation at the interview.”). The interview leaves the parole-eligible individual with no recourse when the public hearing is inevitably denied. The Board has complete discretion to deny a parole hearing, MDOC Policy Directive 06.05.104(M) (N); it is not required to provide any explanation for its decision to do so, see MDOC Policy Directive 06.05.104(N) (clarifying that decision to deny public hearing is not a denial of parole) and MCL 791.235(20) (requiring that only those denied parole receive a written explanation); and the prisoner has no right to court review of the Board's “decision,” MCL 791.234(11).

After the initial interview, there is no right to another interview. MDOC Policy Directive 06.05.104(M). Rather, the prisoner is entitled only to “file review” of the case every five years. Id. There appear to be no standards governing file review; as after an interview, the Board is not required to provide a statement of reasons for its decision to decline a public hearing, and there is no right to court review of an unfavorable determination after file review. See id.; MCL 791.234(9) (providing no articulation of standards, no requirement for a statement, and no mechanism of review).

The process is equally uncertain for individuals who make it to the public hearing stage. The original sentencing judge may unilaterally bar any parole grant. MCL 791.234(8)(c). If the judge does not object, the would-be parolee is afforded a public hearing, but no useful guidelines govern the Board's decision to grant parole. See MCL 791.233(1)(a), (e). The parole statute affords no guidance on the effect the mitigating circumstances of youth, maturation, or rehabilitation must play in the Board's decision. Id. And while prosecutors or victims may appeal a decision to grant parole, the would-be parolee has no right to any sort of review of a denial. MCL 791.234(11).

Given these hurdles, it is unsurprising that only the smallest fraction of Michigan's parolable lifers ever receive parole.<sup>2</sup> This is not inadvertent. The Board explicitly treats individuals serving life with parole differently from those serving non-life sentences, applying a "life means life" approach to keep the vast majority of convicted youth in prison until they die. E.g., People v Hill, 705 NW2d 139 (Mich Ct App 2005) ("It has been a long standing philosophy of the Michigan Parole Board that a life sentence means just that-life in prison."); Citizens Alliance on Prisons &

---

<sup>2</sup> See, e.g., Foster v Booker, 595 F3d 353, 360 (CA 6, 2010) (internal citation omitted) (citing data from 2000-2004 showing that only 0.15% of Michigan's parolable lifers were granted parole). According to the Michigan Department of Corrections ("MDOC"): "Over the past 30 years, averages of 8.2 prisoners per year serving a life sentence have been released through the lifer law or commutation process." Michigan Department of Corrections, Parole from Past to Present <https://www.michigan.gov/corrections/0,4551,7-119-1435\_11601-331908--,00.html> (last visited Feb. 12, 2021). MDOC reported to the legislature that, at the end of 2017, there were a total of 927 parolable lifers with ten years or more of elapsed time since commitment date who had already been interviewed at least once by the parole board. MDOC, Report to the Legislature: Parolable Lifers with Lifer Law Interview Parole Board Actions (2018) <https://www.michigan.gov/documents/corrections/Sec.\_615\_620527\_7.pdf>. Thus, a very small proportion of eligible lifers are released each year.

Public Spending, No Way Out: Michigan's Parole Board Redefines the Meaning of "Life," p 10 (2004) (citing Board-authored materials stating that "[t]he parole board believes a life sentence means life in prison. There is nothing which exists in statute that allows the parole board to think, or do, otherwise."). Numerous courts, both here and elsewhere, have recognized that the Board's "life means life" approach renders the chance of parole extremely remote. See, e.g., Foster v Booker, 595 F3d 353, 360–64 (CA 6, 2010); Hill, 267 Mich App at 347–349; Bey v Rubitschun, unpublished opinion of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan, issued October 23, 2007 (Docket No 05-71318), 2007 WL 7705668, at *15 (quoting testimony from Board official that it was "very rare" to reach the parole hearing phase), rev'd and remanded sub nom Foster v Booker, 595 F3d 353 (CA 6, 2010).

II. To Comply with Constitutional Requirements, Michigan Must Provide People Sentenced to Parolable Life as Youth a Meaningful Opportunity for Release Through the Parole Process

The diminished culpability of youth and their heightened capacity for change, as recognized by the Supreme Court and grounded in well-settled scientific research, means "children are constitutionally different from adults for purposes of sentencing." Miller, 567 US at 471. The Supreme Court has not held that the Eighth Amendment bars the possibility that individuals convicted of crimes committed before adulthood will remain behind bars for life. But except in the rarest of cases in which the sentencer has determined—after giving mitigating effect to the circumstances and characteristics of youth—that a youthful homicide offender is irreparably corrupt, a sentence must provide a "realistic" and "meaningful opportunity for release based on demonstrated maturity and rehabilitation." Montgomery, 136 S Ct at 733; Graham, 560 US at 75, 82. For parolable life sentences such as Mr. Stovall's, this constitutional obligation falls to the parole board. The Board's current policies, practices and governing standards however, fail to meet that obligation and renders the ensuing punishment unconstitutional.

A. The Constitution Requires Consideration of Youth’s Categorical Differences from Adults Before Allowing Them to Die in Prison

The United States Supreme Court has long recognized that children are different from adults, and that these differences are constitutionally significant. Graham, 560 US at 68; Miller, 567 US at 471; Montgomery, 136 S Ct at 733. Three significant differences distinguish youth from adults for culpability purposes:

First, children have a “lack of maturity and an underdeveloped sense of responsibility,” leading to recklessness, impulsivity, and heedless risk-taking. Second, children “are more vulnerable . . . to negative influences and outside pressures,” including from their family and peers; they have limited “contro[l] over their own environment” and lack the ability to extricate themselves from horrific, crime-producing settings. And third, a child’s character is not as “well formed” as an adult’s; his traits are “less fixed” and his actions less likely to be “evidence of irretrievabl[e] deprav[ity].”

Miller, 567 US at 471 (alterations in original) (citations omitted). In reaching these conclusions about young people’s reduced culpability, the Supreme Court has relied on an increasingly settled body of research confirming the distinct emotional, psychological, and neurological attributes of youth. Graham, 560 US at 68 (confirming that since Roper v Simmons, 543 US 551 (2005), “developments in psychology and brain science continue to show fundamental differences between juvenile and adult minds”).

For example, adolescents “often lack the experience, perspective, and judgment to recognize and avoid choices that could be detrimental to them.” JDB v North Carolina, 564 US 261, 272 (2011), quoting Bellotti v Baird, 443 US 622, 635 (1979). See also Scott & Steinberg, Adolescent Development and the Regulation of Youth Crime, 18 The Future of Children 15, 20 (2008) (“Considerable evidence supports the conclusion that children and adolescents are less capable decision makers than adults in ways that are relevant to their criminal choices.”). Although adolescents have the capacity to reason logically, they “are likely less capable than adults are in using these capacities in making real-world choices, partly because of lack of experience and partly because teens are less efficient than adults in processing information.” Id. at 20. Because adolescents are less likely to perceive potential risks, they are less risk-averse than adults. Id. at 21. See also Steinberg, The Science of Adolescent Brain Development and Its Implications for Adolescent Rights and Responsibilities, in Bhabha, ed, Human Rights and Adolescence, pp 59, 64–65 (2014) (“[A]dolescents’ reward centers are activated more than children’s or adults’ when they expect something pleasurable to happen. Heightened sensitivity to anticipated rewards motivates adolescents to engage in acts, even risky acts, when the potential for pleasure is high . . . .” (internal citations omitted)).

Youths’ diminished ability to perceive potential risks and make appropriate decisions is exacerbated by the challenges they face in thinking realistically about future events. See Br for Am Psych Ass’n et al. as Amici Curiae Supporting Pet’rs, Graham v Florida, 560 US 48 (2010) (Nos 08-7412, 08-7621), pp 11–12. Their lack of future orientation means that adolescents are both less likely to think about potential long-term consequences and more likely to assign less weight to those that they have identified, especially when faced with the prospect of short-term rewards. Scott & Steinberg, supra, at 20; Graham, 560 US at 78. Because adolescents attach different values to rewards than adults do, they often exhibit sensation-seeking characteristics that reflect their need to seek “varied, novel, [and] complex . . . experiences [as well as a] willingness to take physical, social, legal and financial risks for the sake of such experience.” Zuckerman, Behavioral Expressions and Biosocial Bases of Sensation Seeking (1994), p 27. Adolescents thus frequently engage in risky behaviors and are less able to suppress action toward emotional stimulus; they have difficulty exhibiting self-control. Scott & Steinberg, supra, at 21–22. All of these attributes cause adolescents to make different calculations than adults, leading them to engage in behavior—including criminal conduct—that they would not participate in in adulthood.

Significantly, the United States Supreme Court has recognized that “[f]or most teens, [risky or antisocial] behaviors are fleeting; they cease with maturity as individual identity becomes settled. Only a relatively small proportion of adolescents who experiment in risky or illegal activities develop entrenched patterns of problem behavior that persist into adulthood.” Roper, 543 US at 570 (second alteration in original), quoting Steinberg & Scott, Less Guilty by Reason of Adolescence: Development Immaturity, Diminished Responsibility, and the Juveniles Death Penalty, 58 Am Psychologist 1009, 1014 (2003). In a study of over 1,300 people who committed juvenile offenses, “even among those individuals who were high-frequency offenders at the beginning of the study, the majority had stopped these behaviors by the time they were 25.” Steinberg, Give Adolescents the Time and Skills to Mature, and Most Offenders Will Stop (2014), p 3 <<http://www.pathwaysstudy.pitt.edu/documents/MacArthur%20Brief%20Give%20Adolescents%20Time.pdf>>.

Most people who commit offenses in childhood are no longer a public safety risk once they reach their mid-twenties, let alone later in life. See, e.g., Models for Change, Research on Pathways to Desistance: December 2012 Update, p 4 <<http://www.modelsforchange.net/publications/357>> (finding that, of more than 1,300 serious offenders studied for seven years, only approximately 10 percent reported continued high levels of antisocial acts, and noting that “it is hard to determine who will continue or escalate their antisocial acts and who will desist,” as “the original offense . . . has little relation to the path the youth follows over the next seven years”).

In light of this research, “[i]ncorrigibility is inconsistent with youth.” Graham, 560 US at 72–73. “Life means life” cannot apply in the juvenile context, because the penological justification of a life sentence—incapacitation—is fundamentally at odds with what we know of children’s capacity for change. See id. at 74.

B. Given Constitutionally Significant Differences Between Children and Adults, the Michigan Constitution and Eighth Amendment Prohibit Life Sentences When the Parole Board's Policies and Practices Fail to Account for Youth and Fail to Order Release Based on an Assessment of Maturity and Rehabilitation

Recognizing the constitutionally significant differences between children and adults, the Eighth Amendment requires that juvenile sentences provide a “realistic” and “meaningful opportunity for release based on demonstrated maturity and rehabilitation.” Montgomery, 136 S Ct at 733; Graham, 560 US at 75, 82. In addition, the Michigan Constitution provides an independent source of relief that this Court should consider granting in this case.

1. Michigan's “cruel or unusual punishment” standard can be interpreted to prohibit life with parole sentences for children

This Court, applying the Michigan Constitution, may be in a preferential position to apply the scientific findings and rationale from Graham and Miller to the present case. State courts are the appropriate venue to recognize broader protections under state law because their decisions do not confront issues of federalism. See Frase, Limiting Excessive Prison Sentences Under Federal and State Constitutions, 11 U Pa J Const L 39, 63 (2008). And since state court judges are either directly elected or appointed by locally elected officials, its widely acknowledged that their decisions invalidating excessive legislative and executive actions under state law raise fewer issues of democratic legitimacy than when federal judges engage in constitutional review. Id.

Whereas the Eighth Amendment proscribes the imposition of “cruel and unusual punishments,” Michigan's Constitution of 1963, Article 1, § 16 states:

Excessive bail shall not be required; excessive fines shall not be imposed; cruel or unusual punishment shall not be inflicted; nor shall witnesses be unreasonably detained. (Emphasis added).

This court has long recognized the intentional textual differences between the federal and state constitutional protections, and has consistently stated that Michigan's “cruel or unusual” standard provides greater protection against certain punishments than its federal counterpart.

People v Carp, 852 NW2d 801, 844 (Mich 2014); People v Lorentzen, 194 NW2d 827, 829 (Mich 1972); People v Bullock, 485 NW2d 866, 872 (Mich 1992) (noting that the “textual difference does not appear to be accidental or inadvertent” and finding punishment “cruel or unusual” under the Michigan Constitution even though the U.S. Supreme Court had found the same punishment permissible under the Eighth Amendment); People v Hallak, 873 NW2d 811, 820 (Mich Ct App 2015), rev’d on other grounds 876 NW2d 523 (Mich 2016) (“Because of its broader language the Michigan prohibition potentially covers a larger group of punishments.”); Carlton v Dep’t of Corrs, 546 NW2d 671, 678 (Mich 1996) (“In an appropriate case, the Michigan Constitution’s prohibition against ‘cruel or unusual’ punishment may be interpreted more broadly than the Eighth Amendment’s prohibition against ‘cruel and unusual’ punishment.”).

Moreover, while only the U.S. Supreme Court can alter its own clear holding, Rodriguez de Quijas v Shearson/Am Exp, Inc, 490 US 477, 484 (1989), this Court faces no such constraint with respect to interpreting its own state constitution. See Bullock, 485 NW2d at 870-71. And consistent with this Court’s earlier doctrine, Michigan’s “cruel or unusual punishment” clause can be interpreted to require relief for children sentenced to life in prison, regardless of whether the Eighth Amendment itself would do so under the same circumstances. See Bullock, supra.

Michigan is joined by eighteen other states prohibiting cruel or unusual penalties. By departing from the federal language in their state constitutions, Michigan, as well as California, Minnesota and Washington make explicitly clear that the “cruel or unusual punishment” standard found in their state constitutions offer broader protections than the Eighth Amendment. Similarly, other states like Georgia, have reached results seemingly more generous than Eighth Amendment jurisprudence would allow, but unlike Michigan, do not expressly hold that the state constitution grants additional protection. See Humphrey v Wilson, 652 SE2d 501 (Ga 2007).

In Michigan, the state constitutional provision incorporates the Eighth Amendment's gross disproportionality test but also adds an inquiry as to whether the punishment satisfies the goal of rehabilitation. See, e.g., People v Dipiazza, 778 NW2d 264, 273 (Mich Ct App 2009) (“Determining whether a punishment is cruel or unusual requires consideration of the gravity of the offense, the harshness of the penalty, a comparison of the penalty to penalties for other crimes in this state, a comparison of the penalty to penalties imposed for the same offense in other states, and the goal of rehabilitation.”); People v Launsbury, 551 NW2d 460, 463 (Mich Ct App 1996). In essence, the Michigan approach closely mirrors the federal standard but expands its analysis to consider rehabilitation in considering the constitutionality of a particular sentence or penalty. Under Michigan law, whether sanctions imposed against a defendant can be considered cruel or unusual is to be determined by also considering the goal of rehabilitation.

Given the broader scope of Article 1, § 16, this Court need not undertake an analysis as to whether imposing a parolable life sentence, where there is little to no actual opportunity for parole, is so “different” that it would constitute “unusual” punishment. Because Michigan decouples the question of whether punishments are unusual from whether punishments are cruel, this comparison to other sentences is unnecessary to find the punishment nevertheless unconstitutional. With a disjunctive constitutional provision that proscribes cruel “or” unusual punishments, the cruelty analysis does not require the court to employ certain constitutional limits as might be required by the heightened Eighth Amendment framework.

Indeed, Michigan courts have found certain non-capital punishments to be cruel or unusual. For example, in People v Lorentzen, 194 NW2d 827, 834 (Mich 1972), this court found that the mandatory minimum penalty of 20 years for a non-violent crime imposed without consideration of the defendant’s individual personality was excessive under both the Eighth Amendment and Article 1, § 16 of Michigan’s constitution. So too, in People v Dipiazza, 778 NW2d 264, 272 (Mich Ct App 2009), the Michigan Court of Appeals concluded that it was cruel or unusual to require the defendant to register as a sex offender for 10 years and carry with him the stigma of being convicted of a crime although he successfully completed his status as a youth trainee.

Additionally, there is no legal or precedential support implying or requiring that the attributes of youth need only be considered when the sentence of life without any possibility of parole is sought. In fact, the Michigan Court of Appeals has found that state law requires a judge to consider the mitigating qualities of youth before sentencing even when he faces a term of years sentence of 40 years without the possibility of parole. People v Wines, 323 Mich App 343 (2018), appeal held in abeyance by People v Wines, 924 NW2d 589 (Mich 2019). In Wines, the Court of Appeals held that when resentencing the defendant for a first-degree murder he committed while he was a child, the trial court was required to consider the distinctive attributes of youth, such as those discussed in Miller v Alabama, even though the prosecutor did not seek a sentence of life without parole.

Moreover, although much is still to be determined about Michigan’s current sentencing scheme, consideration of a child’s youthfulness is wholly consistent with Michigan’s long-established sentencing aims. The objectives generally relevant to sentencing were first articulated by this Court in People v Snow, 386 Mich 586, 592 (1972). In Snow, the Court explained that in imposing sentence, the court should balance the following objectives: (1) reformation of the offender, (2) protection of society, (3) punishment of the offender, and (4) deterrence of others from committing like offenses. Id. As the Michigan Court of Appeals articulated in Wines, “[t]he process of properly balancing these objectives in the case of a minor defendant necessitates consideration of the distinctive attributes of youth.” Wines, at 351. In this context, a sentence like that imposed on Mr. Stovall may violate the Eighth Amendment or the “cruel or unusual” standard even if it technically provides for the possibility of parole or some other form of early release.

2. Life sentences imposed on youth that provide only a remote chance of parole violate the Eighth Amendment

Life-with-the-possibility-of-parole sentences, lengthy term-of-years sentences, and aggregate sentences all violate the Eighth Amendment if they do not provide a realistic opportunity for release at a meaningful time in a prisoner’s life. See State v Moore; 76 NE3d 1127, 1141 (Ohio, 2016), (“Certainly, the [Graham] court envisioned that any nonhomicide juvenile offender would gain an opportunity to obtain release sooner than after three-quarters of a century in prison.”), cert denied 138 S Ct 62, 199 L Ed 2d 183 (2017); Casiano v Comm’r of Corr, 115 A.3d 1031, 1047 (Conn, 2015) (“[A] fifty year term and its grim prospects for any future outside of prison effectively provide a juvenile offender with ‘no chance for fulfillment outside prison walls, no chance for reconciliation with society, no hope.’” (quoting Graham, 560 US at 79)); State v Null, 836 NW2d 41, 71 (Iowa 2013) (“The prospect of geriatric release ... does not provide a ‘meaningful opportunity’ to demonstrate the ‘maturity and rehabilitation’ required to obtain release and reenter society as required by Graham.”). The Supreme Court envisioned that a meaningful opportunity for release would mean more than the mere act of release or a de minimus quantum of time lived outside prison. When articulating what the opportunity encompassed, the Court spoke of the chance to rejoin society in qualitative terms. This Court has the opportunity now to reexamine whether the purpose of a particular life sentence meets these constitutional standards. And even if there could be doubt whether the Eighth Amendment itself prohibits the punishment, the Court may independently examine whether it violates Article 1, § 16 of the Michigan Constitution.

For life sentences that carry the possibility of parole, the Eighth Amendment requires parole boards to account for youth and base release decisions on an assessment of an individual's maturity and rehabilitation. See, e.g., Flores v. Stanford, unpublished order of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, issued September 20, 2019 (Docket No. 18 CV 2468-VB), 2019 WL 4572703, at *9 (denying motion to dismiss Eighth Amendment challenge to New York's parole system based on allegations that "[i]nstead of basing parole determinations on juvenile lifers' demonstrated maturity and rehabilitation, defendants allegedly 'have denied, and continue to deny, juvenile lifers release to parole supervision based only on the crime committed or juvenile criminal history' and 'despite clear evidence of rehabilitation and maturity'"); King v. Landreman, unpublished order of the United States District Court for the Western District of Wisconsin, issued June 4, 2019 (Docket No. 19-cv-338-jdp), 2019 WL 2355545, at *1 (determining upon initial review that juvenile offenders challenging Wisconsin's parole process could proceed on their claims that the state parole board has violated the Eighth Amendment and Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment by failing to provide a meaningful opportunity for release based on demonstrated maturity and rehabilitation); Brown v Precythe, unpublished order of the United States District Court for the Western District of Missouri, issued October 12, 2018 (Docket No. 2:17-CV-04082-NKL), 2018 WL 4956519, at *10 (holding that Missouri's parole system denies a realistic and meaningful opportunity to demonstrate maturity and rehabilitation); Maryland Restorative Justice Initiative v Hogan, unpublished memorandum opinion of the United States District Court for the District of Maryland, issued February 3, 2017 (Docket No. ELH-16-1021), 2017 WL 467731, at *25-*27 (denying in part motion to dismiss challenge to parole system, noting inadequate governing standards, no consideration of maturity and rehabilitation, and alleged denials based on status as lifers and offense); Funchess v Prince, unpublished order of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana, issued February 25, 2016 (Docket No. 14-2105), 2016 WL 756530, at *5 (holding that Louisiana’s “two-step parole procedure” failed to provide a meaningful opportunity for release under the Eighth Amendment); Hayden v Keller, 134 F Supp 3d 1000, 1009 (EDNC, 2015) (holding that parole board procedures did not provide a meaningful opportunity for release because they “do not distinguish parole reviews for juvenile offenders from adult offenders, and thus fail to consider ‘children’s diminished culpability and heightened capacity for change’ in their parole reviews”), appeal dismissed sub nom Hayden v Butler, 667 F App’x 416 (CA 4, 2016) (per curiam); Greiman v Hodges, 79 F Supp 3d 933, 944 (SD Iowa, 2015) (finding plausible claim that parole system was constitutionally deficient because it failed adequately to account for youth, maturity, and rehabilitation and focused instead on the seriousness of the offense); Hawkins v NY State Dep’t of Corr & Cmty Supervision, 140 AD3d 34, 36; 30 NYS3d 397 (2016) (“[P]etitioner was denied his constitutional right to a meaningful opportunity for release when the Board failed to consider the significance of petitioner’s youth and its attendant circumstances at the time of the commission of the crime.”); cf Johnson v State, 215 So3d 1237, 1242 (Fla, 2017) (finding “gain time” accrual constitutionally inadequate because not based on maturity and rehabilitation); State v Young, 794 SE2d 274, 279 (NC, 2016) (rejecting sentence review procedures for failure to consider youth and maturation).

Not only must parole boards consider the unique characteristics of youth and focus on post-crime maturity and rehabilitation, but they must avoid giving undue weight to the seriousness of the underlying offense. In fact, emphasizing the “circumstances of the offense” is “directly at odds with the requirement that maturity and rehabilitation be considered.” Brown, 2018 WL 4956519, at *9. As the Brown court explained,

Consideration of maturity and rehabilitation requires a review of how the inmate has changed since the offense was committed. Permitting the Board to base a denial of parole to a Miller-impacted individual on the “circumstances of the offense” alone necessarily authorizes the Board to disregard evidence of the inmate’s subsequent rehabilitation and maturity—in contravention of the Supreme Court’s edict.

Id.

C. To Meet Constitutional Requirements, States Must Employ Parole Procedures to Ensure Youth Have a Realistic and Meaningful Opportunity for Release

In addition to applying the proper criteria when considering release for juvenile offenders sentenced to life, parole boards must also employ procedures that ensure the constitutionally required realistic and meaningful opportunity for release based on consideration of youth, maturity, and rehabilitation. See, e.g., Brown, 2018 WL 4956519, at **8-10 (delineating how Missouri’s parole policies, procedures, and practices diverge from this requirement); Greimen, 79 F Supp at 945 (recognizing due process rights for juveniles in parole proceedings post-Graham).

Juvenile offenders remain an especially vulnerable prison population. They are more likely than adult offenders to have experienced abuse and trauma, to require psychological and other professional services, to experience educational gaps or deficits, and to lack connections and support outside prison, among other vulnerabilities. See, e.g., Nellis, The Lives of Juvenile Lifers: Findings from a National Survey (The Sentencing Project, 2012), pp 2–3 <<https://sentencingproject.org/wp-content/uploads/2016/01/The-Lives-of-Juvenile-Lifers.pdf>>; American Civil Liberties Union, False Hope: How Parole Systems Fail Youth Serving Extreme Sentences (2016), p 26 <https://www.aclu.org/sites/default/files/field\_document/121416-aclu-parolereportonlinesingle.pdf>. Therefore, parole procedures must account for the differences between individuals sentenced as adults and those sentenced as youth, even though the parole-eligible individual is now an adult. A meaningful opportunity for release must include procedural protections that prepare individuals to navigate the parole process, provide opportunities to adequately address their individual characteristics, and ensure mechanisms for review.

Finally, because most youth outgrow their antisocial and criminal behavior as they mature, review of their maturation and rehabilitation should begin relatively early in their sentences, and their progress should be assessed regularly. Although Miller requires that courts consider a “youth’s chances of becoming rehabilitated,” that decision is difficult to make at the outset. See Roper, 543 US at 573 (“It is difficult even for expert psychologists to differentiate between the juvenile offender whose crime reflects unfortunate yet transient immaturity and the rare juvenile whose crimes reflect irreparable corruption.”). For youth serving sentences for life with parole, the decision has never been made at all, and their youth is neither considered at the time of sentencing nor throughout their sentence. Given the difficulty of determining whether a person is irreparably corrupt and the extremely high stakes of a decision to keep a youth detained for life, parole boards must grant regular review to youth serving life with parole sentences. Early and regular assessments of juveniles enable timely evaluation of the individual’s maturation, progress, and performance, as well as provide an opportunity to confirm that the person is receiving vocational training, programming, and treatment opportunities that foster growth and rehabilitation. See, e.g., Graham, 560 US at 74 (noting the importance of “rehabilitative opportunities or treatment” to “juvenile offenders, who are most in need of and receptive to rehabilitation”).

In sum, to meet the constitutional standard of Graham, Miller, and Montgomery as applied under the Eighth Amendment or Michigan’s broader “cruel or unusual” standard, a parole board must ground its release decision in an understanding of the characteristics of youth and an assessment of an individual’s rehabilitation, and it must have procedures in place to make an informed decision. Only in this way can it ensure that only the rarest juvenile actually serves life in prison.

III. This Court Should Grant Leave to Appeal to Ensure that Michigan Provides Youth Sentenced to Parolable Life a Meaningful Opportunity for Release

Michigan's parole system fails to provide individuals who offend in childhood a realistic and meaningful opportunity for release based on maturity and rehabilitation, as required by both the federal and state constitutions. Rather, the Board has virtually unfettered discretion to deny even the opportunity to be considered for parole, with or without any consideration of youth. Without articulated criteria to guide the Board's decision, and without procedures that safeguard young people's rights to a meaningful parole process, Michigan's parole system contravenes the Eighth Amendment and Article 1, § 16. This Court should grant leave to appeal to ensure that a lifetime behind bars is reserved for only the rarest of young people.

A. The Court Should Grant Leave to Appeal Because the Board's Decisions Do Not Adequately Account for the Mitigating Circumstances of Youth and Post-Crime Maturity and Rehabilitation

Michigan has articulated only two criteria upon which the Board should base its decision:

- “[T]hat the prisoner will not become a menace to society or to the public safety,” and
- “[T]hat arrangements have been made for such honorable and useful employment as the prisoner is capable of performing, for the prisoner's education, or for the prisoner's care if the prisoner is mentally or physically ill or incapacitated.”

MCL 791.233(1)(a), (e). Neither of these criteria address what Miller and Montgomery require—consideration of the youth's age and immaturity at the time of the offense and what should be a presumption of post-crime maturity and rehabilitation. Indeed, Michigan fails to account for youth, maturity, or rehabilitation at all in its parole scheme. See generally MCL 791.233 – MCL 791.235; MDOC Policy Directives 06.05.100, 06.05.103, and 06.05.104. Consequently, the Board's decisions do not pass constitutional muster under either the Eighth Amendment or Michigan's lower bar of cruel or unusual punishment.

Considering—and placing determinative weight on—the mitigating circumstances of youth is non-optional. See Montgomery, 136 S Ct at 734 (“[T]he penological justifications for life without parole collapse in light of ‘the distinctive attributes of youth.’” (quoting Miller, 567 US at 472); see also Young, 794 SE2d at 279 (rejecting North Carolina’s sentence review procedures as constitutionally insufficient for juvenile offenders because of failure to consider youth and maturation); Hayden, 134 F Supp at 1009 (North Carolina “wholly fails to provide [petitioner] with any ‘meaningful opportunity’” for parole because of board’s failure to distinguish parole review for juvenile offenders); Hawkins, 140 AD3d at 36 (holding that the New York Board of Parole “as the entity charged with determining whether petitioner will serve a life sentence, was required to consider the significance of petitioner’s youth and its attendant circumstances at the time of the commission of the crime before making a parole determination” (emphasis added)). Failing to account for the mitigating circumstances of youth and post-conviction maturity run afoul of Michigan’s constitution as it presents a grossly disproportionate parole scheme as compared to many other jurisdictions and offends the goal of rehabilitation.

Indeed, in designing parole procedures for juvenile offenders in the wake of Graham and Miller, numerous states have directed parole boards to account for youth—often through consideration of the factors enumerated in Miller. See, e.g., Ark Code 16-93-621(b)(2) (directing consideration of “[t]he diminished culpability of minors,” “the hallmark features of youth,” and certain mitigating factors of youth); W Va Code 62-12-13b(b) (same); Cal Penal Code 4801(c) (same); see also RI Parole Board, 2018 Guidelines § 1.5(F)(2) (same); Ohio Rev Code 2967.132(E)(2) (requiring consideration of various mitigating factors of youth); Ore Rev Code 144.397(5) (same, and directing that “the board shall consider and give substantial weight to the fact that a person under 18 years of age is incapable of the same reasoning and impulse control as an adult and the diminished culpability of minors as compared to that of adults”). States providing sentence reduction opportunities for juvenile offenders similarly require consideration of youth. See, e.g., DC Code 24-403.03(c)(8), (10) (directing courts to consider age, diminished culpability, the hallmark features of youth, and certain youth-related factors); ND Cent Code 12.1-32-13.1(3)(c), (j) (requiring consideration of youth and related characteristics). These reforms recognize that constitutionally adequate parole requires consideration of the mitigating characteristics of youth.

Michigan also fails to comply with the mandate in Miller and Montgomery that parole boards base release decisions on post-crime maturity and rehabilitation (and not base decisions, for example, on the severity of the offense or victim impact). See Miller, 567 US at 478; Montgomery, 136 S Ct at 736; see also, e.g., Flores, 2019 WL 4572703 at *9 (denying motion to dismiss in light of allegations that parole board denied release based on the offense, overlooking demonstrated maturity and rehabilitation); Hogan, 2017 WL 467731 at *25-*27 (denying motion to dismiss challenge to parole system in part because plaintiff alleged parole board was not required to assess maturity or rehabilitation); Johnson, 215 So3d at 1242 (holding that opportunity for release based on “gain time” in Florida does not satisfy Eighth Amendment, because “gain time, generally, is not based on a determination of maturity and rehabilitation”).

Many states include statutory direction that the parole board or other decisionmakers consider maturity and rehabilitation. Arkansas, for example, enacted legislation requiring its parole board to ensure “a meaningful opportunity to be released on parole based on demonstrated maturity and rehabilitation” and directing consideration of, inter alia, “immaturity . . . at the time of the offense” and “subsequent growth and increased maturity . . . during incarceration,” as well as participation in rehabilitative and educational programs. See Ark Code 16-93-621(b). Ohio, Virginia, Oregon, West Virginia, California, and North Dakota similarly require parole boards to consider post-crime growth and increased maturity. See Ohio Rev Code 2967.132(E)(2)(e) (directing consideration of “the prisoner’s rehabilitation, including any subsequent growth or increase in maturity during imprisonment”); Va Code 531.136 (2); Ore Rev Code 144.397(5)(d), (e); W Va Code 62-12-13b(b); Cal Penal Code 4801(c); ND Cent Code 12.1-32-13.1(3)(e) (requiring consideration of whether a juvenile offender “has demonstrated maturity, rehabilitation, and a fitness to re-enter society sufficient to justify a sentence reduction”); see also DC Code 24-403.03(c)(5) (requiring sentence-modification proceedings to consider “[w]hether the defendant has demonstrated maturity, rehabilitation, and a fitness to reenter society”); RI Parole Board, 2018 Guidelines § 1.5(F)(2) (requiring consideration of “any subsequent growth and increased maturity of the prisoner during incarceration,” including “[p]articipation in available rehabilitation and education programs” and “[e]fforts made toward rehabilitation,” when considering a juvenile offender).

Absent criteria mandating an emphasis on youth and post-crime growth and change, the state cannot guarantee that the Board even considers youth and bases its decision on “demonstrated maturity and rehabilitation.” Graham, 560 US at 75. This Court must step in to grant relief to ensure that these baseline requirements are met.

B. The Court Should Grant Leave to Appeal Because the Board Does Not Afford a Realistic Opportunity for Release

The U.S. and Michigan constitutions require that the opportunity for release for individuals who offended as youth not only be meaningful in its consideration of youth and rehabilitation, but also realistic. See, e.g., Graham, 560 US at 82. A sentence fails to provide a realistic opportunity for release if, as here, the chance of parole is remote, and the release decision is subject to unfettered discretion. Michigan's almost non-existent parole rate for individuals sentenced to life with parole reflects the remoteness of the possibility that they will ever be at liberty. So, too, do the non-existent standards governing the Board's decision.

State and federal courts regularly recognize the need for articulated criteria in the parole system when individuals sentenced as youth face a parolable life sentence. Where a parole system vests unfettered discretion in one or more deciders, it cannot meet the mandate of Graham, Miller, and Montgomery. In Maryland, for example, the federal district court found that juvenile offenders had sufficiently alleged that the parole system violated the Eighth Amendment by operating as a system of executive clemency. See Hogan, 2017 WL 467731, at *25. There, the “unfettered discretion” afforded to the governor “to deny every parole recommendation for any reason whatsoever or for no reason at all,” resulted in denial of every parole recommendation for two decades. Id. Similarly, the North Carolina Supreme Court rejected the adequacy of the state's statutory sentence review because “the possibility of alteration or commutation . . . is deeply uncertain and rooted in essentially unguided discretion.” Young, 794 SE2d at 279. Indeed, parole must not just be based on articulated criteria, but it must be achievable. A federal district court rejected Louisiana's former parole procedure, which required gubernatorial commutation, because “all of these obstacles” to commutation meant that “a life sentence . . . is—for all intents and purposes—a life sentence, regardless of whether the prisoner received a parole eligibility date.” Funchess, 2016 WL 756530, at *5.

In Michigan, the power of the sentencing judge to veto a parole grant, and the Board's lack of articulated criteria to govern its decisions—at the file review, interview, and public hearing stages—necessarily precludes a meaningful opportunity for release. This Court should grant leave to appeal to end the standardless approach to parole that allows the Board to operate beyond the reach of the law. Absent known criteria that, as applied, afford a realistic chance of parole, Michigan's parole procedure cannot pass constitutional muster as applied to youth, rendering life sentences such as Mr. Stovall's invalid.

C. This Court Should Grant Leave to Appeal Because Michigan Fails to Afford Adequate Procedural Protections to Ensure the Board Can Meaningfully Assess an Individual's Maturation and Rehabilitation

The Board must put in place procedures that account for the differences between juvenile and adult offenders and ensure a meaningful assessment of rehabilitation. This Court should grant leave to appeal to remedy the procedural deficiencies that effectively preclude meaningful release opportunities.

First, individuals serving parolable life are guaranteed only one chance to meet in person with even a single member of the Board. MCL 791.234(8)(a); MDOC Policy Directive 06.05.104(M). This interview is scheduled 10 years into a life sentence, meaning that individuals serving life with the possibility of parole may be relegated to only written communications after they have matured and may be better able to demonstrate rehabilitation. Denying regular, in-person review is inconsistent with what science shows about people who offend as youth: they are highly likely to reform as they mature. Moreover, juvenile offenders serving lengthy sentences "will often lack the educational attainment necessary to write effectively and are likely to be much more capable of expressing themselves orally." Russell, Review for Release: Juvenile Offenders, State Parole Practices, and the Eighth Amendment, 89 Ind LJ 373, 423 (2014) [hereinafter Review for Release] (internal citation and quotation marks omitted); see also Nellis, The Lives of Juvenile Lifers, p 3 (noting that two in five respondents had been enrolled in special education classes and that fewer than half had been attending school at all at the time of the offense). In-person hearings permit efficient, real-time exchange between prospective parolees and decisionmakers and help the Board to more fully assess a juvenile offender’s level of insight and maturity and to ensure that the information it has before it is accurate.

Second, Michigan affords parole-eligible individuals only 30 days to prepare for their interview, without the assistance of counsel. MCL 791.234(9)(a), (b); MDOC Policy Directive 06.05.104(O). But meeting the constitutional demands of the Eighth Amendment and Article 1, § 16, requires time to prepare, and assistance of counsel. As the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court has emphasized, juvenile offenders serving lengthy sentences “will likely lack the skills and resources to gather, analyze, and present [relevant] evidence adequately.” Diatchenko v Dist Attorney for Suffolk Dist, 27 NE 3d 349, 360 (Mass, 2015); see also Russell, Review for Release, supra, 89 Ind LJ at 419–442 (detailing that individuals incarcerated since childhood may be lacking skills, access to information about their childhoods, and connections or support within the community); Human Rights Watch, Against All Odds: Prison Conditions for Young Offenders Serving Life Without Parole Sentences in the United States (2012) (noting that many juvenile offenders serving long sentences lose social support and family connections). In contrast to the would-be parolee’s likely skill level, a meaningful opportunity for release necessitates review of a “potentially massive amount of information . . . including legal, medical, disciplinary, education, and work-related evidence.” Diatchenko, 27 NE3d at 360. Courts and legislatures across the country have recognized that placing constitutionally required information before a parole board requires assistance of counsel. See, e.g., id. at 361 (“[G]iven the challenges involved . . . and in light of the fact that the offender’s opportunity for release is critical to the constitutionality of the sentence, we conclude that this opportunity is not likely to be ‘meaningful’ . . . without access to counsel.”); Conn Gen Stat 54-125a(f)(3); Haw Rev Stat 706-670(3)(c); Cal Penal Code 3041.7; Fla Stat 921.1402(5); Ohio Rev Code 2967.132(E)(1); Ore. Rev. State 144.397(12). Without adequate time and support to prepare, the notice and opportunity to be heard that due process requires is rendered meaningless for parole proceedings, precluding a realistic and meaningful opportunity for release.

Finally, the Board's limitless discretion to grant or deny even the opportunity for parole goes unchecked by the judiciary. MCL 791.234(11) (providing for review only after a public hearing, and only if requested by prosecutors or victims). Absent a mechanism to redress Board decisions, Michigan risks condemning youth to life in prison without giving due weight—or any weight at all—to the mitigating factors of youth or maturity and rehabilitation as required. That intolerable risk of disproportionate punishment is precisely what Miller and Montgomery prohibit. Miller, 567 US at 479; Montgomery, 136 S Ct at 726. In Michigan, appropriate review requires not only a right to appeal when a parole-eligible individual is denied a public hearing, but also a way to challenge that denial—that is, a written record that includes the findings supporting the decision. As many states have recognized, parole boards must articulate their reasons for denying parole or parole consideration, including recommendations for improving the likelihood of parole in the future. See, e.g., Cal Penal Code 3041.5(b)(2); Conn Gen Stat 54-125a(f)(5); La Rev Stat 15:574.4(D)(3); cf. DC Code 24-403.03(b)(4); Fla Stat 921.1402(7); Va Code 531.136 (8); -see also Haw Rev Stat 706-670(4) (directing a parole board state its reasons for denial of parole in writing and requiring a verbatim record be made and preserved).

CONCLUSION

Mr. Stovall's case exemplifies the constitutional deficiencies in Michigan's sentencing and parole scheme as applied to individuals sentenced to parolable life for offenses they committed as children. The Board is not required to consider youth, maturity, or rehabilitation at any point in its deliberations. It further fails to provide adequate procedures to ensure that its decision is based on full and accurate consideration of these constitutionally mandated criteria. The U.S. and Michigan Constitutions reserve a life sentence—whether in name or practice—for only the rarest youthful offender. Without a legal mandate that it consider the factors articulated in Miller as well as post-crime maturity and rehabilitation, and without the necessary procedures in place to ensure meaningful review, the Board can and will continue to deny parole as a matter of course to youthful offenders serving parolable life, unconstitutionally condemning them to die in prison. For all of the reasons set forth herein, amici respectfully request that this Court grant defendant Montez Stovall’s application for leave to appeal.

Respectfully submitted, this 18th day of February, 2021.

/s/Tessa Bialek
Tessa B. Bialek (P78080)
Juvenile Sentencing Project
Legal Clinic, Quinnipiac University
School of Law
275 Mount Carmel Ave.
Hamden, CT 06518
(203) 582-3238
tessa.bialek@quinnipiac.edu

/s/Bonsitu Kitaba-Gaviglio
Daniel S. Korobkin (P72842)
Bonsitu A. Kitaba-Gaviglio (P78822)
American Civil Liberties Union Fund
of Michigan
2966 Woodward Ave.
Detroit, MI 48201
(313) 578-6824
dkorobkin@aclumich.org

Marsha L. Levick, Esq. (PA 22535)
Juvenile Law Center
1315 Walnut St., 4th Floor
Philadelphia, PA 19107
(215) 625-0551
mlevick@jlc.org

Counsel for Amici Curiae