IRENAS, Senior District Judge:

Plaintiffs Troy D. ("Troy") and O'Neill S. ("O'Neill") initiated this action seeking compensatory and punitive damages, and declaratory and injunctive relief, for injuries they suffered while in the custody of the New Jersey Juvenile Justice Commission ("JJC").¹ Plaintiffs allege that they were subjected to excessive room isolation and deprived of necessities such as medical care, mental health treatment, proper clothing, and nutrition, in violation of their substantive and procedural due process rights under the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution.² Pending before the Court are Motions to Dismiss pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), or in the alternative, Motions for Summary Judgment pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 56 by the Mental Health Providers and by the JJC Defendants.³

¹ The JJC was created pursuant to Governor Christine Todd Whitman's Juvenile Justice Reform Legislation codified at N.J.S.A. 52:17B-169 et seq. The JJC is "responsible for operating State services and sanctions for juveniles involved in the juvenile justice system and responsible for developing a Statewide plan for effective provision of juvenile justice services and sanctions at the State, county and local level" N.J.S.A. 52:17B-169(k).

² The Court exercises subject matter jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331 and 1367(a).

³ The Mental Health Providers are psychologists with the University Correctional HealthCare ("UCHC") within the University of Medicine and Dentistry of New Jersey ("UMDNJ"). (See Am. Compl. ¶ 67-74.) The Mental Health Providers are represented by Michael Lunga, Esq. with respect to Troy's lack of medical care claim pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and medical negligence claim. (See JJC Defs' Br. in Support at 39 n.8.)

The New Jersey Attorney General ("NJAG") represents the Mental Health Providers on all other claims. The NJAG also represents the JJC Defendants, which include: Administrators of facilities operated by JJC; Shift Commanders at facilities operated by JJC; correctional officers at the Juvenile Medium Security Facility ("JMSF Correctional Officers"); correctional

On February 25, 2009, Troy, then 15 years old, was adjudicated delinquent by the Superior Court of New Jersey and committed to the custody of the JJC.⁴ (Am. Compl. ¶ 75.) Troy remained in custody until October 7, 2009, for a total of 225 days.⁵ (Id. at ¶ 81.) For approximately 178 to 188 of those days, Troy was held in isolation under a special observation status requiring close or constant watch, purportedly for his own safety. (Id. at ¶ 82; JJC Defs' Br. in Support at 17-18.)

On February 27, 2009, O'Neill, then 16 years old, was officers at the New Jersey Training School ("NJTS correctional officers"); Disciplinary or Courtline hearing officers; staff from the JJC Office of Specialized Interagency Services ("OSIS Staff"); Correctional Officer, Jeffrey Saville; Chairman of the New Jersey State Parole Board, James Plousis; Deputy Executive Director for Operations of the JJC, Felix Mickens; and Executive Director of the JJC, Veleria Lawson (collectively, the "JJC Defendants").

adjudicated delinquent for conspiracy to distribute CDS⁶ and committed to the custody of the JJC.⁷ (Id. at ¶ 121.) Between June 2009 and October 2010, O'Neill was held in isolation for approximately 50 days, awaiting hearings for alleged disciplinary violations.⁸ (Id. at ¶ 126.) The practice of isolating juveniles prior to disciplinary hearings is referred to as "pre-hearing room restriction." (Id. at ¶ 128.)

While Plaintiffs were placed in isolation for different reasons, the conditions they experienced were similar. Each was confined to a seven-foot-by-seven-foot room and allowed out only for hygiene purposes. (Id. ¶¶ 86, 170.) The rooms contained

only a concrete bed slab, a toilet, a sink, and a mattress pad.⁹

(Id. ¶¶ 87, 170.) Troy was allegedly held in extreme cold, while O'Neill was allegedly isolated for four days in extreme heat.

(Id. ¶¶ 88, 155.) Both Plaintiffs were denied any educational materials or programming, and were prevented from interacting with their peers. (Id. ¶¶ 86, 170.)

In addition, Plaintiffs were allegedly denied mental health treatment during their periods in isolation. Troy was scheduled for twice a week treatment sessions as part of his delinquency adjudication for a sex offense. (Id. ¶ 96.) However, while Troy was under close or constant watch, he was given only approximately six of those treatment sessions and received only nine other individual therapy sessions. (Id. ¶ 97.) While a mental health clinician checked on Troy every day to assess his classification status as a part of daily rounds, these visits, conducted through the door of his cell, lasted an average of twelve minutes and involved only basic questions about Troy's mental state. (Id. ¶¶ 98-99.) Around the anniversary of his mother's death, Troy made requests for counseling that were

denied.¹⁰ (Id. ¶ 100.)

O'Neill was also deprived of therapeutic mental health treatment while in isolation. (Id. ¶ 171.) Between June 29, 2010 and July 2, 2010, O'Neill asked to speak to a counselor, but was told that counselors did not visit that part of the building. (Id. ¶ 154.) Like Troy, O'Neill was visited by mental health clinicians on daily rounds, but these visits only assessed whether O'Neill was experiencing distress.¹¹ (Id. ¶ 171.)

The Amended Complaint further alleges that both Plaintiffs were deprived of other necessary medical treatment. On several occasions, Troy was injured when JJC staff used force to restrain him, and his injuries were allegedly inadequately treated. (Id. ¶ 112.) O'Neill was similarly denied medical treatment, and on one occasion suffered for four days with a broken jaw before getting medical attention. (Id. ¶ 150.)

Both Plaintiffs sought to be removed from isolation. Troy frequently made requests to JJC staff that he be removed from

¹¹ In an August 2, 2010 letter, Defendant Mickens stated "[t]here is no affirmative record indicating that Resident [O'Neill] was treated by Mental Health personnel during the four days he was assigned to UH-5. Even though JJC policy requires that residents on restricted status be seen regularly . . . mental health records did not have any record of visiting him at the time in question." (Am. Compl. ¶ 154.)

close or constant watch. (Id. ¶¶ 100-101, 107.) Such requests were denied and Troy was told that additional requests would result in longer periods of isolation. (Id. ¶ 100.) The Amended Complaint alleges that there were no avenues available for Plaintiffs to file formal grievances and that attempts by O'Neill to obtain information on appeals procedures were met with threats of longer periods of isolation. (Id. ¶¶ 156, 175.)

O'Neill appealed some of the decisions to place him in isolation, but the treatment team upheld each decision that he appealed.¹² (Id. ¶¶ 157, 159, 164.) On March 10, 2010, an attorney with the Children's Justice Clinic at Rutgers School of Law--Camden wrote to Defendant Thomas, Superintendent of JMSF, that isolation was being used for O'Neill excessively and inappropriately. (Id. ¶ 147.) O'Neill also sought to address the conditions of his confinement before the Superior Court of New Jersey, but the court ruled that it had no jurisdiction to consider the matter.¹³ (Id. ¶ 176.)

The Amended Complaint alleges that the periods of prolonged isolation experienced by Plaintiffs were responsible for the deterioration of their mental states. (Id. ¶¶ 102-104, 170-172.)

¹² O'Neill appealed six of the eighteen disciplinary sanctions. (Lemane Cert. Ex. E at 34-35.)

¹³ O'Neill's access to the courts was also allegedly limited by the fact that he did not have access to any post-disposition advocate. (Am. Compl. ¶ 178.)

Throughout his confinement, Troy attempted to commit suicide and engaged in other destructive behavior including: cutting himself using caulk or tile from the floor or walls, banging his head against the wall, urinating out of his cell, and smearing feces on the walls. (Id. ¶¶ 102-104, 106.) According to the Amended Complaint, "isolation was contra-indicated for Troy because he had a history of mental illness, psychiatric hospitalizations, self-harm and suicidal actions."¹⁴ (Am. Compl. ¶ 109.)

On September 30, 2009, the Children's Justice Clinic of Rutgers School of Law-Camden filed a motion on behalf of Troy in the Superior Court of New Jersey, Chancery Division, Family Part, in Cumberland County, seeking to have Troy immediately transferred to a psychiatric hospital. (Id. ¶ 116.) The motion argued that Troy's mental health problems were exacerbated by the excessive isolation, the lack of mental health treatment, and lack of educational materials. (Id.) On October 7, 2009, Troy was moved to Trinitas Psychiatric Hospital. (Id. ¶ 117.) In late October 2009, Troy was transferred to the Carrier Clinic, a Residential Treatment Center in Bell Meade, New Jersey, and is no longer in JJC custody.¹⁵ (Id. ¶¶ 119-20.)

¹⁵ On October 15, 2009, the Superior Court of New Jersey, Chancery Division, Family Part, Cumberland County, vacated its

O'Neill remains in the custody of the JJC. (Id. ¶ 124.)

B.

On June 7, 2010, Troy initiated this action by filing the Complaint in this Court. On December 2, 2010, an Amended Complaint was filed, adding O'Neill as a Plaintiff, along with additional Defendants and causes of action.

Plaintiffs' First and Seventh Counts allege substantive due process violations for unconstitutional conditions of confinement, failure to protect and lack of medical care pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983.¹⁶

The Second and Eighth Counts assert claims under the New Jersey Civil Rights Act against all Defendants, except Defendants Lawson and Plousis.

The Third and Eleventh Counts are facial constitutional challenges to N.J.A.C. §§ 13:101-6.17(e), 13:101-6.6(c), and 13:101-8.1(a), against Defendant Lawson in her official capacity. The Twelfth Count is against Defendant Plousis in his official capacity and alleges that the New Jersey Parole Board's policy of prohibiting attorneys at juvenile parole hearings is facially unconstitutional because it denies procedural due process.

order committing Troy to JJC custody. (Am. Compl. ¶ 118.) According to the Amended Complaint, Troy currently resides in the Cumberland County Juvenile Detention Center. (Id. ¶ 22.)

¹⁶ Only Plaintiff Troy brings a claim for lack of medical care.

The Fourth and Ninth Counts allege violations of procedural due process pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983 in the use of pre-hearing room restriction, temporary close custody and special observation status.

The Sixth and Thirteenth Counts allege negligence against all Defendants.

On April 4, 2011, the JJC Defendants and the Mental Health Providers filed Motions to Dismiss or, in the alternative, Motions for Summary Judgment. The Mental Health Providers have incorporated the arguments made by the JJC Defendants in their Motion.

II.

The Mental Health Providers and the JJC Defendants each move to dismiss the Amended Complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted and, because reference is made to documents outside the pleadings, for summary judgment.¹⁷ Because the Court relies on documents outside of the pleadings, and Defendants have moved in the alternative for summary judgment, the Court will treat the pending motions as motions for summary judgment.

"[S]ummary judgment is proper 'if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law.'" Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322 (1986) (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c)). In deciding a motion for summary judgment, the Court must construe the facts and inferences in a light most favorable to the non-moving party. Pollock v. Am. Tel. & Tel. Long Lines, 794 F.2d 860, 864 (3d Cir. 1986).

"'With respect to an issue on which the non-moving party bears the burden of proof, the burden on the moving party may be discharged by 'showing' - that is, pointing out to the district court - that there is an absence of evidence to support the nonmoving party's case.'" Conoshenti v. Public Serv. Elec. & Gas, 364 F.3d 135, 145-46 (3d Cir. 2004) (quoting Celotex, 477 U.S. at 323).

The role of the Court is not "to weigh the evidence and determine the truth of the matter, but to determine whether there is a genuine issue for trial." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 249 (1986).

III.

As will become evident in the Court's consideration of Defendants' arguments with respect to each of Plaintiffs' claims, summary judgment on many of the issues in this case is premature. The factual record is undeveloped and thus the Court is not able to undertake the fact-intensive inquiry demanded by Plaintiffs' constitutional claims. With this in mind, the Court will now turn to the specific arguments made by Defendants in support of their Motions.

A.

Defendants argue that O'Neill's § 1983 claims are barred by his failure to exhaust administrative remedies as required by the Prisoner Litigation Reform Act ("PLRA").¹⁸ Failure to exhaust is an affirmative defense which defendants bear the burden of proving. Brown v. Croak, 312 F.3d 109, 111 (3d Cir. 2002).

The PLRA provides that "[n]o action shall be brought with respect to prison conditions under section 1983 of this title, or any other Federal law, by a prisoner confined in any jail, prison, or other correctional facility until such administrative remedies as are available are exhausted." 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(a). Under the PLRA, a prisoner is "any person incarcerated or detained in any facility who is accused of, convicted of, sentenced for, or adjudicated delinquent for, violations of criminal law or the terms and conditions of parole, probation, pretrial release, or diversionary program." Id. at § 1997e(h); see also Alexander S. v. Boyd, 113 F.3d 1373, 1384 (4th Cir. 1997) (explaining that PLRA prisoner definition includes those incarcerated in juvenile detention facilities).

Accordingly, Plaintiffs' Motion for Leave to File a Sur-Reply (Dkt. No. 33) will be granted and Defendants' Motion with respect to Troy's failure to exhaust administrative remedies will be denied.

O'Neill is subject to the PLRA's administrative exhaustion requirement because he was adjudicated delinquent on February 7, 2009, and remained in custody when added to this suit. (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 121, 125.) Thus, the PLRA requires that O'Neill exhaust his administrative remedies before pursuing his claims in this Court.

In order to comply with the PLRA, prisoners must have properly exhausted available administrative remedies before filing suit. Woodford v. Ngo, 548 U.S. 81, 94 (2006). Because prison grievance procedures determine what steps are required for exhaustion, the exhaustion analysis begins with an examination of prisoner regulation and handbooks. Williams v. Beard, 482 F.3d 637, 639 (3d Cir. 2007); Womack v. Smith, 310 Fed. Appx. 547, 550 (3d Cir. 2009). “[C]ompliance with the administrative remedy scheme will be satisfactory if it is substantial.” Spruill, 372 F.3d at 232 (quoting Nyhuis v. Reno, 204 F.3d 65, 77-78 (3d Cir. 2000)).

Each juvenile confined at JJC-operated facilities receives two Handbooks: a “Handbook on Discipline” (hereinafter “Discipline Handbook”) and a “Juveniles’ Handbook of Rules and Regulations” (hereinafter “Rules Handbook”). (See Lemane Cert. Ex. F.) Plaintiffs received each of these Handbooks. (Id.)

Defendants point to three administrative remedies that O’Neill was required to exhaust prior to filing suit. First, they argue that O’Neill was required to submit completed Special Classification Request Form J081 to a social worker. (JJC Defs’ Br. at 14 (citing N.J.A.C. 13:95-8.5).) However, this grievance procedure is not included in either of the Handbooks that were provided to O’Neill. While Defendants cite to the N.J.A.C. as containing this provision, they fail to point to any evidence demonstrating that they made reasonable efforts to make O’Neill aware of this process in any way.

Absent any evidence that juveniles at JJC-operated facilities were educated about this procedure or had access to the materials necessary to utilize it, the Court cannot find this to be an available remedy that O’Neill was required to exhaust.

See Mitchell v. Horn, 318 F.3d 523, 529 (3d Cir. 2003) (administrative remedy unavailable where prison officials did not provide the required grievance forms); see also Goebert v. Lee County, 510 F.3d 1312, 1323 (11th Cir. 2007) (holding that an administrative remedy “which is unknown and unknowable is unavailable”); Hemphill v. New York, 380 F.3d 680, 688 (2d Cir. 2004) (applying objective test examining whether a “similarly situated individual of ordinary firmness” would have deemed a particular remedy to be available). Defendants have not met their burden of proving that O’Neill failed to exhaust this administrative procedure.

Next, Defendants argue that O’Neill was required to appeal each disciplinary sanction that resulted in his placement in isolation within 48 hours of being provided written notice of each. (JJC Defs’ Br. at 14.) With respect to appeals of disciplinary decisions, the Discipline Handbook provides:

The juvenile shall be advised in writing by the Treatment Team of the opportunity to appeal to the Superintendent or his or her designee, who shall be an Assistant Superintendent, at the time the juvenile is provided with the disciplinary decision. Juveniles shall have 48 hours from receipt of the disciplinary decision to make such appeal.

(Lemane Cert. Ex F. at 116/151.)

The Court finds that Defendants have not met their burden of demonstrating that O’Neill failed to exhaust with respect to this administrative grievance procedure. In order to trigger a juvenile's right to appeal, the juvenile must "be advised in writing by the Treatment Team of the opportunity to appeal" Defendants have presented no evidence that O'Neill was notified in writing of his opportunity to appeal each of the disciplinary sanctions imposed against him. Therefore, absent written notification of the disciplinary decision and his right to appeal, O'Neill's time to appeal was never triggered.¹⁹

Finally, Defendants argue that O'Neill was required to submit a complaint to the Ombudsman in accordance with the Rules Handbook. (JJC Defs' Br. at 13-14.) The section titled "Ombudsman," provides:

An ombudsman is available to juveniles to register their complaints and air their grievances. The ombudsman will investigate the issues and assist to resolve or achieve a fair settlement on issues at the institutional level. The ombudsman has a mailbox located within the institution for juveniles to submit their complaint.

(Lemane Cert. Ex. F. 134/151.)

Plaintiffs argue that O'Neill properly exhausted when an attorney from the Children's Justice Clinic at Rutgers School of Law-Camden wrote a letter to Defendant Linda Thomas, Superintendent of JMSF, complaining on behalf of O'Neill that isolation was being used "excessively and inappropriately."²⁰ (Am. Compl. ¶ 147.) Defendant Veleria Lawson, JJC Executive Director, responded that she would look into the matter and copied Defendant Felix Mickens, Deputy Executive Director for JJC Operations, on her response. (Id.)

¹⁹ Moreover, in light of the nature of O'Neill's claims in this suit--that the conditions of isolation and the process of placing him on pre-hearing room restriction violated his constitutional rights--it is not even clear to this Court that appealing the reason he was placed in pre-hearing room restriction is required prior to filing suit. Neither of the Handbooks explicitly addresses administrative grievance procedures, and in the absence of clear guidance for what a juvenile must do to satisfy proper administrative exhaustion, this Court concludes that this particular appeals process is not a mandatory step in addressing the legal issues presented by O'Neill's claims.

The Court concludes that this letter demonstrates proper exhaustion of the Ombudsman grievance process, which requires a juvenile to present his grievances so that they may be "investig[ated]" and "resolve[d]" "at the institutional level." The letter sent to Defendant Thomas on O'Neill's behalf presented such an opportunity. (See Am. Compl. ¶ 147 (ultimate administrative authorities at JJC responded that they would investigate the matter.)) Thus, Defendants were afforded, and took advantage of, the opportunity to address O'Neill's claims.²¹

This Court's conclusion comports with the policy goals of the PLRA in that the letter gave the facility “an opportunity to correct its own mistakes with respect to the programs it administers before it is haled into federal court” and demonstrates a reasonable attempt at compliance with JJC procedures. Woodford, 548 U.S. at 89 (internal quotations omitted). Moreover, the allegations in this case do not resemble the frivolous claims Congress sought to “filter out” in enacting the PLRA. See Porter v. Nussle, 534 U.S. 516, 524-35 (2002).

Therefore, the Court finds that O’Neill properly exhausted available administrative remedies. Accordingly, Defendants’ Motions will be denied with respect to their affirmative defense of failure to exhaust.

B.

The Complaint asserts substantive due process violations for conditions of confinement, failure to protect from harm and lack of mental health care. The Complaint also asserts procedural due process violations for the use of room restriction for O’Neill, and for the use of close custody and special observation statuses for Troy. In addition, Plaintiffs bring facial constitutional challenges to the New Jersey Parole Board’s policy of denying access to counsel at juvenile parole hearings and to specific provisions in the New Jersey Administrative Code.²²

²² The challenged provisions of the N.J.A.C. were promulgated by the JJC pursuant to the grant of authority in N.J.S.A. § 52:17B-170(e) (22).

The Court will first consider Plaintiffs' facial constitutional challenges. Then the Court will turn to Plaintiffs' conditions of confinement, failure to protect and lack of medical care claims before evaluating Plaintiffs' procedural due process violations.

Count Three is a facial constitutional challenge on Fourteenth Amendment substantive due process grounds to N.J.A.C. 13:101-6.17(e), which provides: "[n]othing in this section shall prevent the placement of a juvenile in room restriction for the minimum time necessary to eliminate an immediate threat to the safety of either the juvenile, staff or other juveniles, or to the orderly operation of the facility." According to the Amended Complaint, this provision is facially unconstitutional because it "impermissibly permits a juvenile to be secluded in isolation for an indefinite period of time." (Am. Compl. ¶ 269.)

Count Eleven is a facial constitutional challenge on Fourteenth Amendment procedural due process grounds to N.J.A.C. 13:101-6.6(c) and 13:101-8.1(a). Section 13:101-6.6(c) provides:

Juveniles held in prehearing room restriction . . . shall receive a hearing within three days, including weekends and holidays, unless there are exceptional circumstances, unavoidable delays or reasonable postponements. Should the third day fall on a Saturday, Sunday or holiday, the hearing shall be held on the weekday immediately following the weekend or holiday.

N.J.A.C. 13:101-6.6(c). Section 13:101-8.1(a) provides:

A juvenile may be placed in room restriction pending the hearing of disciplinary charges by a Disciplinary Hearing Officer, provided, however, that such prehearing room restriction shall be served only in a secure facility with an assigned Disciplinary Hearing Officer, and, shall be limited to, instances where the Superintendent or designee determines that prehearing room restriction is necessary for the safety of the juvenile, staff or other juveniles, or for the orderly operation of the facility.

N.J.A.C. 13:101-8.1(a). According to the Amended Complaint, these provisions are facially unconstitutional because they permit "JJC to seclude a juvenile in prehearing room restriction . . . without any procedural due process, including the ability to consult with counsel, the right to a meaningful opportunity to be heard, and the right to appeal the decision." (Am. Compl. ¶ 303.)

Finally, Count Twelve is a facial constitutional challenge on Fourteenth Amendment procedural due process grounds to the New Jersey Parole Board's policy of "prohibit[ing] attorneys from being present at initial, quarterly, or annual review hearings."²³ (Am. Compl. ¶ 309.)

In Turner v. Safley, the United States Supreme Court held that four factors are relevant in reviewing allegations that a prison regulation infringes constitutional rights: whether the regulation has a "valid, rational connection" to a legitimate governmental interest; whether alternative means are open to inmates to exercise the asserted right; what impact an accommodation of the right would have on guards and inmates and prison resources; and whether there are "ready alternatives" to the regulation.²⁴ 482 U.S. 78, 89-91 (1987).

Given the undeveloped record before the Court and the fact-sensitive nature of the Turner analysis, Defendants have not met their burden of demonstrating entitlement to judgment as a matter of law.

With respect to Count Twelve, the JJC Defendants argue that

O'Neill's claim lacks merit "[b]ecause there is no constitutional right to counsel at parole hearings." (JJC Defs' Br. at 28.) In Swarthout v. Cooke, the Supreme Court reaffirmed its earlier holding that the procedures required by the Due Process Clause in the context of parole release hearings are minimal. 131 S.Ct. 859, 862 (2011) (per curiam) (citing Greenholtz v. Inmates of Neb. Penal and Correctional Complex, 442 U.S. 1, 16 (1979)). Where a prisoner is allowed an opportunity to be heard and provided a statement of the reasons why parole is denied, the Constitutional standard is satisfied. Id.

However, in light of the unique facts of this case, the Court finds that Defendants are not entitled to judgment as a matter of law on Count Twelve. O'Neill is a juvenile allegedly subjected to unjustified, lengthy periods of emotionally and physically cruel conditions of isolation. The undeveloped record before the Court does not present any factual details about what happened at O'Neill's parole release hearing. In light of O'Neill's status as a juvenile and the undeveloped factual record, the Court cannot make a determination regarding this constitutional claim.²⁵

Accordingly, Defendants have not met their burden and their Motions with respect to Counts Three, Eleven and Twelve will be denied.

In Counts One and Seven of the Amended Complaint, Plaintiffs allege substantive due process violations under the Fourteenth Amendment for the conditions of their confinement, lack of medical care and a failure to protect from harm.

Defendants argue that these federal constitutional challenges are properly analyzed under the Eighth Amendment because Troy and O'Neill had already been adjudicated delinquent and were not pre-trial detainees.²⁶ Plaintiffs contend that because punishment is not the primary goal for juveniles confined following delinquency adjudications, their constitutional claims should be evaluated under the Fourteenth Amendment, which applies to constitutional challenges by individuals confined for treatment purposes and those in pre-trial detention.²⁷ (Pls' Br.

Amendments).

²⁶ Defendants argue in the alternative that if this Court determines that the Fourteenth Amendment applies they are entitled to qualified immunity. (JJC Defs' Br. at 29 n.6.) The Court need not address this argument because it finds that the Eighth Amendment is the proper standard under which to evaluate Plaintiffs' claims. See discussion infra.

²⁷ While New Jersey's early mission with respect to juveniles was predominately one of rehabilitation, "punishment has now joined rehabilitation as a component of the State's core mission with respect to juvenile offenders." State v. Presha, in Opp. at 17.) The Court will first consider the appropriate constitutional standard before turning to the merits of Plaintiffs' claims.

In considering constitutional challenges to conditions of confinement, courts distinguish between pre-trial detainees and convicted inmates. Because "[a] person lawfully committed to pretrial detention has not been adjudged guilty of any crime," that person "may not be punished prior to an adjudication of guilt in accordance with due process of law." Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 535-36 (1979). Thus, pre-trial detainees are protected from punishment under the Fourteenth Amendment's Due Process Clause.²⁸ Id. On the other hand, convicted inmates are protected only from punishment that is cruel and unusual under the Eighth Amendment. Id. at 536 n.16; see also Hubbard v. Taylor, 399 F.3d 150, 167 n.23 (3d Cir. 2005).

In the context of constitutional claims by juveniles who 163 N.J. 304, 314 (2000). See also N.J.S.A. 2A:4A-21(b) (The Code of Juvenile Justice shall seek "to remove from children committing delinquent acts certain statutory consequences of criminal behavior, and to substitute therefor an adequate program or supervision, care and rehabilitation, and a range of sanctions designed to promote accountability and protect the public.").

have been adjudicated delinquent, the Third Circuit held that allegations concerning conditions of confinement and a failure to protect from harm “fit squarely within the Eighth Amendment’s prohibition on cruel and unusual punishment.” Betts v. New Castle Youth Development Center, 621 F.3d 249, 261 (3d Cir. 2010). In Betts, the Third Circuit applied the more-specific provision rule to foreclose the juvenile’s constitutional claims under the Fourteenth Amendment where he also brought claims challenging the same conduct under the Eighth Amendment. Id.

Plaintiffs rely on A.M. v. Luzerne Cnty. Juvenile Det. Ctr., 372 F.3d 572 (3d Cir. 2004), for the proposition that constitutional claims by juveniles should be analyzed under the Fourteenth Amendment rather than the Eighth Amendment. This is not a correct reading of the case. In analyzing the juvenile’s constitutional claims, the Third Circuit relied on the accepted distinction between detainees and convicted prisoners. Id. at 584. Because the events forming the basis of the juvenile’s constitutional claims occurred prior to his disposition hearing, the court deemed him a detainee and not a convicted prisoner. Id. at 576, 584. Thus, the court noted that “A.M.’s claims are appropriately analyzed under the Fourteenth Amendment since he was a detainee and not a convicted prisoner.” Id. at 584.

In this case, Plaintiffs were not detainees, but adjudicated delinquent juveniles who had been committed to the custody of the JJC when the actions giving rise to their constitutional claims occurred. Therefore, their constitutional claims concerning their conditions of confinement, failure to protect from harm and lack of medical care should be analyzed under the Eighth Amendment.²⁹

Plaintiffs' Eighth Amendment conditions of confinement, failure to protect from harm and inadequate medical care claims all require proof that prison officials acted with deliberate indifference. See Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 828 (1994) (failure to protect claim requires proof that the defendants were "deliberately indifferen[t] to a substantial risk of serious harm"); Rhodes v. Chapman, 452 U.S. 337, 346-48 (1981) (conditions of confinement claim under Eighth Amendment requires proof that living conditions are cruel or deprive prisoner of the necessities of life and that such conditions are the result of the prison officials' deliberate indifference); A.M. v. Luzerne County Juvenile Det. Ctr., 372 F.3d 572, 584 (3d Cir. 2004) (inadequate medical care claim requires proof of deliberate indifference to a serious medical need). In the

Eighth Amendment context, the deliberate indifference element is a subjective test requiring actual knowledge on the part of prison officials. See Kaucher v. County of Bucks, 455 F.3d 418, 427 (3d Cir. 2006) (citing Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 836 (1994)).

The Mental Health Providers rely on Troy's Mental Health Progress Notes and Electronic Medical Records to demonstrate that they acted "in a manner irreconcilable with the term 'deliberate indifference.'" (Mental Health Providers' Br. at 16-17.) However, mere notations on a patient's medical charts do not offer this Court a sufficient basis from which to assess the intention and actual knowledge of the Mental Health Providers.

Given the undeveloped record before the Court and the fact-sensitive nature of the deliberate indifference analysis, the Court cannot make a determination at this time regarding the intent or subjective knowledge of the JJC Defendants or the Mental Health Providers, as required for Plaintiffs' conditions of confinement, failure to protect and lack of medical care claims.

Moreover, JJC Defendants' argument with respect to Troy's lack of medical care claim that they cannot be deliberately indifferent because Troy was under observation by the Mental Health Providers is unavailing. Although a prison official's mere failure to respond directly to the medical complaints of a prisoner who is already being treated by the prison doctor is insufficient to establish deliberate indifference, see Durmer v. O'Carroll, 991 F.2d 64, 69 (1993), this is not consistent with Troy's claims. The Complaint specifically alleges that JJC Defendants prevented Troy from receiving necessary medical treatment. (See Am. Compl. ¶¶ 91, 96, 100, 105, 113.) Thus, there is a genuine issue of material fact regarding whether Troy was prevented from receiving treatment from the Mental Health Providers, and JJC Defendants have not met their burden of demonstrating entitlement to judgment as a matter of law.

Accordingly, Defendants' Motions with respect to Counts One and Seven will be denied.³⁰

In Counts Four and Nine, Plaintiffs allege violations of procedural due process pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983 in the use of pre-hearing room restriction for O'Neill and temporary close custody and special observation status for Troy.

The Fourteenth Amendment prohibits state deprivations of life, liberty or property without due process of law. In considering a procedural due process claim, courts must first “determine whether the nature of the interest is one within the contemplation of the ‘liberty or property’ language of the Fourteenth Amendment.” Evans v. Secretary PA Dep’t of Correc., --- F.3d ---, 2011 WL 1833237, at *9 (3d Cir. 2011) (quoting Newman v. Beard, 617 F.3d 775, 782 (3d Cir. 2010)).

³⁰ JJC Defendants also argue that Plaintiffs' conditions of confinement claim must fail because the physical conditions of the isolation room met industry standards, the room temperature was maintained on a 24-hour basis, and the finger foods were nutritionally adequate. (JJC Defs' Br. at 32-33.) However, Plaintiffs' conditions of confinement claim is broader than this argument suggests, and JJC Defendants have not met their burden with respect to Plaintiffs' plausible and well-pled conditions of confinement claim.

Procedural protections must be afforded even to prisoners before they are deprived of rights they retain while incarcerated. Id. (citing Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 558 (1974)). A convicted prisoner has a liberty interest where a restraint imposes an “atypical and significant hardship on the inmate in relation to the ordinary incidents of prison life.” Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 484 (1995). “[T]he baseline for determining what is ‘atypical and significant’--‘the ordinary incidents of prison life’--is ascertained by what a sentenced inmate may reasonably expect to encounter as a result of his or her conviction in accordance with due process of law.” Griffin v. Vaughn, 122 F.3d 703, 706 (3d Cir. 1997).

If the court “determine[s] that the interest asserted is protected by the Due Process Clause, the question then becomes what process is due to protect it.” Evans, 2011 WL 1833237, at *9 (quoting Newman, 617 F.3d at 783) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). This requires analysis of three factors: “First, the private interest that will be affected by the official action; second, the risk of an erroneous deprivation of such interest through the procedures used, and the probable value, if any, of additional or substitute procedural safeguards; and finally, the Government's interest, including the function involved and the fiscal and administrative burdens that the additional or substitute procedural requirement would entail." Matthews v. Eldridge, 424 U.S. 319, 335 (1976).

Troy

Defendants' argument with respect to Troy's procedural due process claims is twofold. First, they rely on Meachum v. Fano, 427 U.S. 215 (1976), to argue that Troy had no right to procedural due process for a transfer to a more restrictive placement. (JJC Defs' Br. at 20.) Second, they argue that process was available to Troy because he could request a change in status by completing a form and returning it to his social worker. (Id.)

With respect to Defendants' first argument, they have not met their burden of demonstrating entitlement to judgment as a matter of law. While Meachum held that the Due Process Clause does not protect a prisoner from being transferred to an institution with substantially more burdensome conditions, 427 U.S. at 225, transfers for mental health purposes are treated differently.

In Vitek v. Jones, the United States Supreme Court held that appropriate procedural safeguards are required before an inmate could be transferred from prison to a state mental hospital. 445 U.S. 480, 493 (1980). In reaching this decision, the Court noted the major changes to conditions of confinement that would result from such a transfer, which include greater limitations on freedom of action and the stigmatizing consequences of a mental illness diagnosis. Id. at 492. The Court concluded that additional due process protections are necessary “[b]ecause prisoners facing involuntary transfer to a mental hospital are threatened with immediate deprivation of liberty interests they are currently enjoying and because of the inherent risk of a mistaken transfer.” Id. at 495-96.

While Troy was not transferred to a mental hospital, the conditions of his confinement were substantially altered due to medical professionals’ determination of his mental health.³¹ As noted supra, while isolated under special observation statuses for 178 to 188 out of the 225 days he spent in JJC custody, Troy was allegedly denied access to necessities that were readily available to the general JJC population, including education, physical recreation, access to peers, proper nutrition, court-ordered counseling sessions, and all personal possessions, including pens and paper, clothing, and bedding. The Court cannot say at this early stage in the litigation that the situation in this case is not analogous to Vitek where the prisoner had a liberty interest requiring additional procedural protections.

With respect to Defendants' second argument--that process was available to Troy because he could request a change in status by completing a form and returning it to his social worker--the Court is not persuaded that this satisfies the Constitutional standard. See supra section III.A.

Accordingly, Defendants' Motions with respect to Troy's procedural due process claims will be denied.

O'Neill

Defendants argue first that O'Neill has no right to procedural due process regarding a transfer to a more restrictive placement. Defendants also argue that "the disciplinary hearing process, which includes a right to receive written notice of the charges, a hearing, the right to present evidence and confront and cross-examine witnesses, and the avenue for appeal, satisfies the requirements of procedural due process under any measure of what would be due an institutionalized person." (JJC Defs' Br. at 24.)

Plaintiffs contend that "Defendants repeatedly placed O'Neill in a much more restrictive form of custody without an initial appearance before a neutral decision-maker. He was not able to speak in his own defense until the disciplinary hearing, which usually occurred after 3-5 days of living in a punitive isolation cell." (Pls' Opp. at 44-45.) According to Plaintiffs, because O'Neill was placed in isolation for days prior to any hearing, he was not afforded the opportunity to be heard "at a meaningful time and in a meaningful manner." Armstrong v. Manzo, 380 U.S. 545, 552 (1965).

"Discipline by prison officials in response to a wide range of misconduct falls within the expected perimeters of the sentence imposed by a court of law." Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 485 (1995). However, discipline which represents a "dramatic departure from the basic conditions" of a sentence may trigger due process protection. Id. In Sandin, the Court found that a prisoner's "discipline in segregated confinement did not present the type of atypical, significant deprivation in which a State might conceivably create a liberty interest." Id. at 486. In reaching this holding, the Court emphasized that the conditions of disciplinary segregated confinement mirrored conditions imposed upon inmates in administrative segregation and protective custody as well as for inmates in the general prison population who also experienced significant periods of lock-down time. Id.

Given the undeveloped record in this case and O'Neill's status as a juvenile, the Court cannot fully consider at this stage of the litigation how Sandin would apply here. As to the process through which O'Neill could challenge his sanctions, the Court does not find the record sufficiently developed to properly consider whether it satisfies the dictates of due process based on the relevant factors as set forth in Matthews v. Eldridge, 424 U.S. 319 (1976). Accordingly, Defendants' Motion with respect to O'Neill's procedural due process claims will be denied.

C.

Defendants argue that the negligence claims in Counts Six and Thirteen should be dismissed because Plaintiffs have failed to abide by the notice requirements set forth in the New Jersey Tort Claims Act, N.J.S.A. 59:8-8. The JJC Defendants point out that the Complaint was filed in this action on June 7, 2010 and notices of claim were not filed until December 29, 2010. (JJC Defs' Br. at 40.) Therefore, the JJC Defendants argue, because Plaintiffs failed to file their notice of claims before they filed suit, their negligence claims are barred and should be dismissed. (Id.)

The New Jersey Tort Claims Act provides:

A claim relating to a cause of action for . . . injury or damage to person . . . shall be presented as provided in this chapter not later than the ninetieth day after accrual of the cause of action. After the expiration of six months from the date notice of claim is received, the claimant may file suit in an appropriate court of law. The claimant shall be forever barred from recovering against a public entity or public employee if:

a. He failed to file his claim with the public entity within 90 days of accrual of his claim except as otherwise provided in section 59:8-9; or

b. Two years have elapsed since the accrual of the claim; or

c. The claimant or his authorized representative entered into a settlement agreement with respect to the claim.

Nothing in this section shall prohibit an infant or incompetent person from commencing an action under this act within the time limitations contained herein, after his coming to or being of full age or sane mind.

Id.

Plaintiff Troy filed a Complaint in June, 2010. On December 29, 2010, a notice of claims was filed.³² Thus, Troy's claims were technically premature, insofar as N.J.S.A. 59:8-8 provides that suit may be filed "six months from the date notice of claim is received," and Troy filed his timely notice of claim after first commencing suit.

However, as New Jersey courts have previously recognized, dismissal without prejudice is an "inappropriate" disposition where sufficient time has passed since the filing of the complaint and there has been no showing that the public entity has been "frustrated in undertaking an investigation of the claim." Reale v. Twp. of Wayne, 132 N.J. Super. 100, 111 (Law Div. 1975); see also Guerrero v. Newark, 216 N.J. Super. 66, 74-75 (App. Div. 1987). From the time this action was commenced in June 2010, Defendants have had sufficient opportunity to "investigate the claim" and possibly "work toward a settlement," which are the goals promoted by the six month waiting period. Reale, 132 N.J. at 111. Thus, the Court will not dismiss Troy's negligence claims.

O'Neill

O'Neill was born on October 4, 1992 and reached the age of majority in October, 2010. (See Lemane Cert. Ex. E.) On December 2, 2010, an Amended Complaint adding Plaintiff O'Neill was filed. Since the notice of claims was filed in December, 2010, it was timely filed within 90 days of O'Neill reaching the age of majority. For the reasons stated above, O'Neill's negligence claims will not be dismissed merely because he filed suit prior to filing a timely notice of tort claim.

Defendants argue that they are entitled to dismissal of Plaintiffs' punitive damages claims because the "record here is devoid of any facts or evidence indicating that the defendants acted with an 'evil motive' or 'callous indifference.'" (JJC Defs' Br. at 41.)

A plaintiff may recover punitive damages in a civil rights action under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 if the defendants' actions were done with "malice or reckless indifference to the federally protected rights of an aggrieved individual." Kolstad v. American Dental Ass'n, 527 U.S. 526, 530 (1999). Thus, whether punitive damages are warranted is a fact-specific inquiry requiring examination of Defendants' intent and knowledge. Given the early stage of this litigation and the undeveloped record before the Court, a ruling on Plaintiffs' punitive damages claim is premature. Therefore, the Court will deny without prejudice Defendants' motions with respect to Plaintiffs' punitive damages claim.

IV.

For the reasons stated above, JJC Defendants and Mental Health Providers Motions for Summary Judgment will be denied. An appropriate Order accompanies this Opinion.
